CHAP. I.

Part of Dr. Priestley's affertions given.—Shown to contradict a great number of learned, pious men; the fundamental principles of all the reformed churches in Europe; and oppose the facred Scriptures of divine truth.—The old Seaman's affertions stated, and supported by several eminent divines, and other learned gentlemen.—Twelve irresutable proofs given to show that is a plural noun—

CHAP. II.

The meaning of the name, TITT, Jebovah, given from various learned divines and other learned gentlemen.—A new translation of Gen. iii. 22; xi. 7; xviii. 1, 2, &c. Isa. vi. 1—3, 8; Gen. iii. 24, with a Note respecting the flaming sword there mentioned — Page 35

CHAP. III.

A description of the Cherubim, its signification, import, and end.—The writer's opinions supported by the testimony of the heathen, and the learned, as well as by several parts of the Holy Scriptures — 44

CHAP. IV.

Twelve irrefutable proofs given that Jesus Christ has the incommunicable name, Jehovah, ascribed to him by the inspired writers; and that he is the Lord the Saviour — 62

CHAP. V.

Dr. Priestley's testimony in savour of the authenticity of the gospels, the book of Asts, and the epistles of the apostle Paul.—A cavil supposed, stated, and answered.—Seven irresistible proofs that Jesus Christ is God and Saviour. 82

CHAP. VI.

Gives many proofs that a divine person, who has the names Aleim, Jehovah, and Adoni, became incarnate, agreeable to the prophecies that were given of old concerning him. A note shows, from the testimony of two Pagan historians, that the Oracle at Delphos declared Christ to be "Lord" of the gods."—Irrefutably proved that Christ is worshipped by the angels in heaven, and by the primitive Christians on earth. Also incontrovartible proofs given that

Three strange affertions of Dr. Priestley's stated. Ist. That Christ had not any agony of mind during his sufferings. 2d. That the dostrine of atonement was unknown to David, and other pious persons, named in the Old Testament. 3d. That "the death of Christ is never spoken" of as a sin-offering;" and that in all the books of "Scripture we no where find the principle on which the "dostrine of the atonement is founded. Nay, the contrary sentiment occurs every where."—Answered and refuted by such proofs as will be allowed to be conclusive.

CHAP. VII.

Another very strange assertion of Dr. Priestley's stated, where he says, that "facrifices might be of men's in"vention," and that "they appear easily to fall under
"the general notion of gifts, or the more particular one
"of entertainments, and furnished at the expence of the "person who was dependent and obliged." Answered and refuted by the testimony and practice of the heathen, universally, as well as those of the fews, and supported by the holy Scriptures. —

CHAP. VIII.

Another Affertion of Dr. Priestley's stated, where he says, "The pardon of sin is in reality always dispensed by "the free mercy of God, on account of mosts personal

^{*} This should have begun a new chapter, beginning at the words, "Since I wrote what precedes," but was onlined by mistake.

"virtue, a penitent upright heart, and a reformed exemplary life, without regard to the sufferings or merit of any being whatever." Answered, and so clearly refuted, as that Dr. Priestley must be constrained to acknowledge his inability to repent, or in any degree to "serve God acceptably, with reverence, and godly "fear," until regenerated by the Spirit of God. Page 133

CHAP. IX.

Gives the proper signification of the Greek nouns said Kupios. Shews the confession of faith, for Jews and Gentiles, requisite for admission into the communion of the faithful, in the days of primitive Christianity. Currects several oversights in the common translation of the Bible. Also further incontestable proofs of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and points out the manner of a sinner's justification before God.—An affertion of Julian, the apostate, stated. Supported by Dr. Priestley; but shown to be an inexcusable error. The dreadful end of that apostate Emperor (Julian), and the awful consequence of his having attempted to rebuild the city of Jerusalem, and a third temple

CHAP. X.

Shows that the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ was irrefutably manifested after his resurrection.—That the expression, "God the Father," frequently means the whole divine Trinity, clearly proved; and that the apostle Peter preached in Hebrew at Jerusalem.—A note, wherein is shown Dr. Priestley's acknowledgment, that Christraised himself from the dead — 171

A few texts altered from the common reading; because the Arians, &c. support their of inions chiefly on that authority; which texts, when duly translated, make strongly against their notions.—Several of Dr. Priestley's affertions shown to be self-contradictory and remarked upon. Cicero's true character briesly hinted at.

CHAP. XII.

An answer to Dr. Priestley's denying the doctrine of "ori"ginal sin." Shown to be insisted upon by the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles. The doctrine proved by experience, and undeniable matter of fact.

CHAP. XIII.

Dr. Priestley's affertion, that "The doctrine of the plenary" inspiration of the Scriptures is a great cause of inside"lity," is shown to be an affertion destitute of sufficient evidence; and as full testimony, as is requisite to establish any sact, is given to prove that all the canonical books of the sucred Scriptures are of divine inspiration.

193

CHAP. XIV.

Proves the personality and divinity of the Holy Ghost. 212

CHAP. XV.

Proves that there are a Trinity of perfons in the Unity of the Godhead who are co-cqual and co-eternal; and that the glorious operations of fantification, and of teaching divine wisdom, are ascribed equally to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Also that each of those divine persons is the object of prayer and adoration.—The principles shewn whereby a true believer is astuated.—A note on the liturgy and communion of the established church.—Anecdote of the first L—d B——e.—Instance of the blessed efficacy of preaching Christ Jesus as "the only wife God, our Saviour."—Anecdote of Lord Rochesser.

CHAP. XVI.

A friendly exhortation to Dr. Priestley, with a serious short meditation (from the late learned and pious Rev. Dr. Doddridge), of the unutterable value of one immortal soul.

READER.

The Reader, who favours Dr. Priestley's religious notions, is entreated carefully to remember that he has only that Doctor's own affertions, or those of other fallible men, to support his opinions; while the writer of the following sheets has the testimony of the whole Word of God, even that of all the inspired prophets and apostles: therefore, whether the evidence of all those is to be taken, or that of a pitiable man, like Dr. Priestley, judge thou impartially and without prejudice; and, at the same time, recollect that the opinions of the wifeft and best men of all ages, for more than seventeen hundred years, have been diametrically opposite to that he feems fo defirous of propagating and establishing; with this view, among others (I suppose), to rob the humbled Christian of his only fure consolation, by endeavouring to destroy "the truth as it is in Christ," fee Ephef. iv. 21; and undeify "the Lord of glory," I Cor. ii. 8. But, bleffed be God, his artillery is only fingle-cast, honey-combed with rust, of wicked Cain's mold. В mold, therefore in a fhort time will burst, and destroy the whole crew with an utter and eternal destruction. Also the carriages on which his artillery is mounted are of a nature that must speedily decay, being full of fap, and conftructed by a Mr. Human Reason, whose evidence in spiritual things has been little regarded by experienced fathers in Christ, on account of his imbecility and infufficiency for near fix thousand years *. Befide, feamen hate fappy timber, because it will not endure the trial of various climates; for when a feaman undertakes a fiege, if his artillery be duly proved, and his carriages well constructed of timber that has been thoroughly feafoned, he does not eafily relinquish it, especially when his artillery is double fortified, as mine is, by the Old and New Testaments, which have withflood the united batteries of the World, Arians, Socinians, &c. &c. and the Devil, for at least 3280 years, fince that excellent founder Moses cast the first parts of this invaluable artillery; by the report and found whereof many thousands have been quickened from a " death in fin unto a life of righteousness;" and it is incorruptible, for "it flandeth, or endureth, for ever." See Isaiah xl. 8; 1 Pet. i. 23, 25.

It may here be necessary to apprise the reader, that a Socinian teacher positively affects that "the divinity" of Jesus Christ is no more to be proved from the

^{*}I am very far from endeavouring to invalidate reason, except where it "exalteth itself against the knowledge (or revelation) of God." See 2 Cor. x. 5. See also page 15, note, of these sheets.

"New Testament than the doctrine of transubstan-" tiation." How lamentable their blindness! how awfully dreadful their depravity! how abominable their herefy! For Christ says, "I am in the Father, " and the Father in me," John xiv. 10; also, in John x. 30, Jesus Christ declares, I and the Father we are One. And the inspired apostle Paul says, Rom. ix. 5, " Christ is over all, God blessed for ever. " Amen." Alfo, 2 Cor. v. 19, "God was in Christ, " reconciling the world unto himfelf." Again, Coloff. ii. 9, " In him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the "Godhead bodily." Therefore you fee the unutterable danger of believing the doctrines of Socinians, or any other fect who deny the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ; who is called in the margin of our Holy Bible, Acts iii. 15, "The Author of Life;" and in 1 Cor. ii. 8, "The Lord of Glory." From which the reader may perceive that they (the Socinians) have affuredly " perverted the words of the living Gcd," Jer. xxiii. 36. Is it not "for this cause that God hath " fent them strong delusion, that they should believe a " lie: That they all might be damned who believed not " the truth?" See 2 Theff. ii. 11, 12. For it is written, Pfalm exix. 89, "For ever, O Jehovah, thy word is " fettled in the heavens *." And the wife king Solomon fays, "Every word of God is pure," Prov. xxx. 5. And the royal pfalmift fays, "By the word of " thy lips I am kept + from the paths of the destroyer," יבשמים. Heb. בשמים.

Pfalm xvii. 4. Alfo, he fays, "In God will I praise "the Word, in Jehovah will I praise the Word," Pfalm lvi. 10*. Therefore, steady Christians will take the advice of the inspired apostle, and "contend "earnestly for the faith, which was once delivered unto "the faints," Jude, ver. 3; and look for salvation unto a reconciled God in Christ," 2 Cor. v. 18, "19. Who, having existed (υπαρχω) in the form of God, he thought (or esteemed) it no robbery to be equal with God," Phil. ii. 6. For which cause every true Christian will ascribe, with the apostle, "To the only wife God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, "dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen." Jude, ver. 25.

I am aware how extremely difficult it is to perfuade the men of the world to pay the least serious attention to religious subjects, and that most men are offended if you attempt to remind them of an eternal state; they suppose it an affront upon their prudence as well as upon their understanding to conclude that, if they be attentive to their temporal concerns, they will be unmindful

[&]quot; The pronoun bis is not in the Hebrew of this text, nor in the Septuagint, but the latter read the last clause of the verse, " επι τω πυριω αινεσω λογον," In the Lord will I praise the Logos. I am therefore of opinion that the verse should be read, In the Aleim will I praise the Logos; in Jehovah will I praise the Logos; Christ, as a divine person in the Aleim, consequently, in Jehovah. But, as the Hebrew will admit of it, may not the verse be read thus? I will praise the Logos in the Aleim, I will praise the Logos in Jehovah. For though the Psalmist most certainly esteemed the written Word very highly, he did not adore it; but he did adore the Messal.

of those which are of such infinite importance; yet you may fee those very men " living in pleasure," following the world, and pursuing its maxims with the utmost avidity; but never giving any proofs of their regard " to the things that are unfeen and eternal:" on the contrary, fwearing and infifting that "there is no "harm in doing fo," profaning the holy fabbath of the Lord, and declaring that "God takes no notice " of it;" yet all the time supposing that at death their inheritance will be " that weight of glory which "God has prepared for them that love him," Miferable depravity! awful delufion! Neverthelefs, it is greatly to be feared that fuch is the state of at least half of the genteel men in this land of light and gospelliberty. May we not then lament, with the apostle, and fay that " light is come into the world, but men " have loved darkness rather than light;" which clearly manifests that "their deeds are evil?" Should you question them concerning the impurity of their lives, their answer in general is, " Poh! can you sup-" pose that God takes notice of such actions? He is " otherwife engaged than to regard what we do." How then shall "God judge the world in righteousness, or " minister true judgment unto the people?" If the kings of the earth are fo vigilant in watching over the honour of their laws, will not that God, "who fearcheth the " hearts and trieth the reins of the children of men," be jealous for his laws, and vindicate the honour of his name? Surely he will. Oh! then, "let the wicked " forfake his way, and the unrighteous man his " thoughts, B 3

"thoughts, and let him return to the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Ifaiah lv. 7.

Should it be asked, why I have not affixed my name to these sheets? I would reply, that my name is not fufficiently important to recommend them, provided their contents do not recommend themselves to the Public.—Another reason is, that those who would not read them on account of my name, may read them from the peculiarity of the author's fignature, who has used the seas more than forty years, as often as he could get employed, and his health would enable him to ferve thereon. And he humbly recommends it to every one who has the least doubt of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, to examine the Scriptures hereafter quoted with holy reverence, attention, and impartiality; at the same time befeeching the God of all grace to give him, " to be filled with the knowledge " of bis will, in all wisdom and spiritual understand-"ing;" Col. i. 9. " In whom (Christ) are hid all the " treasures of wisdom and knowledge;" Col. ii. 3.

I was also induced to write what follows in the annexed sheets from a persuasion that there may be many simple-hearted honest men, who have been detuded by Dr. Priestley's eloquence, rather than by the validity of his arguments or the purity of his doctrines, who, perhaps, may not have leisure or opportunity to weigh his doctrines properly, nor abilities to consute his opinions, but who wish to be set right in so important a concern. I, therefore, offer to the reader (free

(free of every degree of pecuniary advantage to myself) a full confutation of his doctrines, and the unutterable danger of living and dying in that Doctor's religious principles; which, I have proved, must infallibly end in utter ruin, and in eternal, irremediable woe, unless Dr. Prieftley and his adherents can prove that the Old and New Testaments are a forgery, and not the written "Word of the only living and true God," but the devices of men " of like passions with themselves." But whoever confiders the wifdom therein manifested, in the moral precepts fet forth;—the holy commandments delivered;-the prophecies that have had their full accomplishment; beside many other excellencies, not to be found (even in a very fmall degree) in any other book, or from any other authority; he must be necesfitated to confess that the holy Bible is of the wisdom of God, and " is able to make us wife unto falvation, " through faith which is in Christ Jesus;" 2 Tim. iii. 15. It is also farther afferted by the apostle, Rom. i. 16, That "the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto " falvation to every one that believeth."-How?-Ver. 17, " For therein is the righteousness of God re-" vealed from faith to faith; as it is written, the just "fhall live by faith." See also Habbakuk ii. 4; Gal. iii. 11; Heb. x. 38: and the righteousness there spoken of as God's righteousness, is called, Phil. iii. 9, " the " righteousness of Christ." And Jeremiah, prophetying of Christ, chap. xxiii. 6, calls bim "Jehovah our " righteousness." Also, the prophet Isaiah, liv. 17, says, that the righteousness of God's servants " is of me,

" faith Jehovah;" which manifest Christ's divinity. Nor is there a text in the whole Bible, when taken in connection with its context, but what overturns the foundation upon which the Arians and Socinians build their hypothesis. So that they reject "the exceeding great "and precious promises" whereby true believers "are made partakers of the divine nature," 2 Pet. i. 4; but which, instead of being a sweet savour of life unto life, must be unto them a savour of death unto death. May the righteous mercy of God, in Christ Jesus, "turn them from their disobedience to the wisdom of "the just," for his great name's sake!

Permit me, candid reader, only to remark, that I have not been fo studious to observe order as truth, and to point out the errors of the day wherein many are enveloped, and are inattentive respecting the consequences.

I expect to be as severely animadverted upon by infidels as censorious criticism can invent; but I am very indifferent about that, as I slatter myself every truly serious Christian will approve my labour, and "wish" it "fuccess in the name of the Lord."

I am, &c.

A Grey-Headed SEAMAN.

As the fingularity of the title and the peculiarity of the fignature of this book may, perhaps, furprise Dr. Prieftley a little, that a feaman should presume to doubt his abilities to teach the truth of the Christian religion, or to call in question that fystem which he has thought proper to adopt, and endeavours with great zeal to propagate, and whereby he may be fo far difconcerted as not to be quite in fo proper a frame of mind for prayer as he might wish; and, as I suppose that he would not read a book fo very opposite to his preachings and publications without fervent supplication, that, if he should be wrong, he may be convinced of it; if right, that the controverfy may not warp or mislead him-I have therefore composed a prayer, which appears, to me, fuited to the exigence; and, if he should be inclined to use it during his surprise, or until he can compose a better, it is entirely at his fervice.

A PRAYER,

Preparatory to reading the following Pages.

O Lord Ged of infinite wisdom, mercy, and goodness, who art the Fountain of all Blessedness, and from whom alone cometh every good and perfect gift; who hast not only encouraged, but also invited us to call upon thy adorable Majesty, in sull assurance that "whatseever we ask in the name of Christ we shall "receive;" and, as I most sincerely desire that my eye should be single to thy glory, and my heart without guile before Thee, I bow my knees to beg for wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, in what belongs to my eternal peace; most earnestly entreating, that whatever is dark in me, may be illumined; what is low, may be raised;

raised; what I understand not, as I ought, vouchsafe to teach me; what I am unacquainted with, that I ought to know, condefcend to make known to me, and guide me by thy wisdom, direct me by thy counsel, and regulate my ideas by thy understanding; for it is written, "If any lack wifdom, let him ask of God,-and it " shall be given him *." I, therefore, humbly claim the gracious promife, and befeech thy divine Majesty to give me "that wisdom which is from above, that is " first pure, and then peaceable; that wisdom which " is profitable to direct; that wisdom which it is thy " prerogative to bestow." And be further pleased to enable me to read these sheets with impartiality and without prejudice; and give me to fee thy mind clearly concerning the Scriptures therein quoted; that, if my opinions and fentiments of religion are, in any degree, contrary to thy-bleffed will, as revealed in thy holy Word, let me be convinced thereof, be guided into all truth, and be made "obedient to the faith" (Acts vi. 7), in humility, fear, and love; fo that, when " the great white throne shall be fet—the dead, " fmall and great, stand before God-the books " opened, and the spirits of all flesh judged according " to what is written therein †;" I may not be found a deceiver of my own foul, but a faithful minister of thy most facred Word. And all that I ask is in the name, and for the alone fake, of thy "dear Son Jesus Christ, our " Lord." Amen.

As the contents of the following sheets are of high import to every one not firmly established in the momentous doctrines of which they treat, it may not be an unnecessary caution to any reader that he should use the same prayer, or some other similar to it; omitting the latter part of the words printed in Italics, towards the conclusion of it, by such as are not in the ministry of the gospel; whereby they may receive a benefit from this book which they do not expect. And that they may be so savoured, is the very earnest intercession of the Writer.

I confess that it would be unutterably presumptuous in me to attempt correcting any part of our valuable Bible translation were there not some oversights in it, from causes inexplicable to me; but which are so very apposite to the dispute in question as to render it indispensably requisite (in my opinion) to alter some sew texts from the common reading. I, therefore, humbly hope that I shall be excused for doing so, especially as every alteration I have made, not only brings the reading nearer to the meaning of the sacred original, but also accords more strictly with those articles, &c. which are the foundation of our excellent, established, national church.

Could our invaluable reformers and learned translators have foreseen, that Socinianism would have been suffered to rear its baneful head, and stalk through the nation with that confidence which our days present, I am humbly of opinion that those pious and learned gentlemen would have been more guarded in translating those texts which I thought it needful to alter; and, as I have not any other view in so doing, than to make the truth of God's most holy Word appear more excellent, I hope that this apology will entitle me to that candour which I have assiduously endeavoured to merit.

The plain English reader, unacquainted with Hebrew and Greek, is entreated not to be discouraged from perusing this book because of the words he may meet with in either of those languages, as I humbly hope that he will find all of them clearly explained; and I have inserted them only with a view to determine the passage that each refers to; for though the validity of my arguments do not depend entirely upon

upon the accurate translation of those texts, yet they are thereby rendered more important by being more convincing and irrefutable.

But should any humbled, believing soul be discouraged by those translations from laying hold of any precious promise suitable to his case, and say, "It is true; this promise would be very precious to me could I be assured that it is rightly translated, but perhaps it is not so—"

To such I would reply, that it is an honour to our valuable Bible that the promises are, in general, accurately translated; or, if there be any mistake in them, it is that they do not hold out so great consolation to the sincere humble Christian as the original warrants; so that the true members of either of the churches of England or Scotland may raise a very safe superstructure on the invaluable soundation upon which both of them are sounded; for "Jesus Christ is the chief cornerssion" in both those elegant temples, which, in essentials, answer to each other "as face answers to face in a glass."

For instance.

Pfalm xx. '1—4, and xxiii. 1—4, are all promifes; and ver. Ift of Pfalm xx. may be read, "Jehovah will hear thee in "the day of trouble, the name of the God of Jacob shall be thy impregnable fortress." Also, Pfalm cxli. 4, instead of "Incline not my heart to any evil thing," &c. that verse is a comfortable affurance that God will not incline my heart to any evil. And,

Hebrews xiii. 5, last clause, should be read, "I will never, never leave thee; no, never, never forsake thee."

Or, if we look for elegance of composition in the display of Jehovah's persections, the original holds them forth much more encouraging and delightful than the translation.

Instance.

Ifaiah xlv. 7, "I form the light and concrete darkness, I make peace and cause triumph (or rejoicing)." Also,

Pfalm cviii. 4, " For thy exuberant goodness (kindness or mercy)" is magnified in the highest heavens, and thy truth beyond the conflicting ethers."

INTRODUCTION.

JOSEPH PRIESTLEY, LL.D. F.R.S. SIR,

I have read part of your writings, which (from one who calls himself a Christian divine) appear to me so very extraordinary, that I cannot resist the impulse I seel to reply to a small part of them; and I am more strongly induced to address you, as those give room for supposition that you are a principal leader, and a chief pillar of the sect of the Socinians; who, I am well informed, are at this day exerting themselves with the utmost diligence to propagate their dreadful heresy through every part of the kingdom; confessing that "whatever zeal any one may have for the doctrine of the Trinity, they have not less for Socinianism; asserting that the divinity of Christ is no more to be proved in the New Testament than the doctrine of Transubstantiation."

But when you cast your eye upon my signature (which is not a seigned one) you will, probably, distain me as Goliath of old contemned the stripling David. Indeed, when you recollect the smart, sensible, publication of the Rev. Mr. Shepherd, vicar of Tollar, Dorset; the learned and incontrovertible arguments against your notions of the Rev. Mr. Parkhurst, M. A. and the very ingenious Remarks which the Rev. Mr. Rowles of Chard, Devon, has also published against your writings, in a small pamphlet; together with the important letters of the Rev. Mr. Madan, and the very excellent sermons of the Rev. Caleb Evans, D. D. you and your coadjutors may think it highly presumptuous in me, an old feaman, to entertain the least hope of confuting Dr. Prieftley; and, in truth, fo should I, were it not for the following reasons: 1st, I find so much felf-contradiction in your published opinions of the holy Scriptures as I never supposed would drop from the lips or pen of any man who pretends to instruct others, and which leads me to suppose that it will not be a difficult task to confute those opinions, and overturn them. 2dly, The reverend gentlemen, whose names I have mentioned above, have omitted many effential portions of the precious word of God, which will afford me the most potent weapons to beat down your supposed irresutable arguments, and enable, even me, not only to refute the principles of that fouldestructive herefy you maintain, and are endeavouring (alas! with too much success, I fear) to propagate; but also to confute and confound Socious and all his adherents, except they totally reject the authenticity of the boly Scriptures. But it gives me pleasure to underftand, Sir, that this is not your unhappiness, and, in fome measure, encourages this address; for I learn from one who heard you openly "avow your reception "of the holy Bible as the Word of God." Being agreed on this very momentous point, any further introduction is unnecessary; and, as the royal Psalmist says, Psalm xvii. 4—" By the Word of thy lips I am "kept from the paths of the destroyer;" so, while you believe the facred Scriptures to be the Word of God, there is some "hope of your end," because "they are able to make you wife unto falvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus," 2 Tim. iii. 15.

Here, Sir, I must beg leave to make a digression; because that, although you may receive the holy Bible as "the Word of God," some may read this address who believe many parts, and object to other parts of the holy Scriptures; but this is to impeach the wildom of the Holy Spirit. This is, instead of being "doers of "the Word," to judge and condemn "the Word of " the living God*." Therefore, I would ask such objectors, if the facred pages of the holy Bible are not allowed to be the chief guide and umpire in every theological disputation, to whom, or to what, shall we appeal? Each to those of our own opinion? This will rather extend the difference than reconcile us. To those called Christians of different persuasions? These, probably, instead of approving either, will condemn both. Should it be faid, let the writings of some of the antients be the arbiters, for (notwithstanding their mistakes in religion) "they were very learned, very fen-" fible, and, in general, moral, good fort of people;" this would be wandering very far from the point indeed, to bring in a number of persons to adjudge a controverfy who had never the least acquaintance with the subject they should decide upon. Yet even this, strange as it may feem, would be a shorter way of de-

* A bishop in France, we are told, has lately said, " Reli-" gion-is eternal reason, watching over the order of things." This idea has a kind of beauty that at first sight captivates; but it is only found. Reason is not religion. Right reason concurs with true revealed religion; and, when reason is truly sanctified, it approves no other religion than that which is founded on the great truths, the glorious doctrines of God's holy written Word. Every other religion is founded on ignorance, error, superstition, or enthusiasm. The stupid idolatry of which all nations were guilty (Judea excepted) before the publication of the holy gospel. fully proves this. Had that bishop said, " Natural religion is the " law of God announced by the voice of reason," he would have found many supporters of his affertion; but he would have spoken much more laudably had he faid, "The Christian religion is the " law," or rather gift " of God, announced by the voice of Re-" velation."

termining the dispute than by referring to those who are prejudiced against any part of the holy Scriptures; because it cannot be denied that the heathen (from the earliest antiquity, down to the period when our Lord became incarnate) worshipped, as they supposed, one divinity in a plurality of objects. It would also be easy to demonstrate that the Scripture doctrine of the Holy Trinity is so far from being "a Pagan idea, derived " from Pagan mythology, as the Arians, &c. affert," that it was preached, believed, maintained, and eftablished, long before that there was so pitiable a being on the earth as either Pagan or Arian. But as many persons conceit that " most of the heathen were faved "eternally, on account of their having been moral, good fort of people," I would ask, with whom was that morality to be found? Amongst the lower class? No: Those generally imitate their superiors; and, therefore, what is done by the latter is commonly practised by the former.—Among the philosophers? No: Those not only held opinions, but taught precepts contrary to moral rectitude, as may be feen in Dr. Leland's "Advantage and Necessity of Revelation."—Among their men of genius and learning? No: What the apostle Paul declares of the heathen in general, in that very humiliating Scripture, Rom. i. 27, where he fays, "Men burned in their lufts one to" wards another," was literally verified in a person of the most elevated genius and improved understanding that the Heathen world could boast of, and who lived in an age when mere human learning was at its zenith. I mean Virgil, who was a ftriking and irrefutable comment on the Scripture just quoted; for he (Virgil) was not ashamed to describe his scandalous and unnatural lust for a youth whom he calls Alexis,

Alexis, in the clearest manner, and by the most emphatic expressions; "for he uses the very words, Ardeo, to burn; and Uro, to inflame." See the whole of his fecond Eclogue; where lin. 68, 9, runs thus:

- " Formosum Pastor Corydon ardebat Alexin " Me tamen urit amor."

Nor was this abominable fin peculiar to poets, and other learned men, among the Heathen; even philo-fophers were not altogether innocent of "the accurfed "thing." It also pervaded the court of Tiberius Cæfar, and was fashionable there; for he, himself, set the example, and kept his horrid revellings, in various parts of his empire. I, myself, have been at an island, called Capria (i. e. a Goat), delightfully situated, from which is a most enchanting prospect, natural and artificial; but there is also a natural phonomenon, in full view, that the modern Italians call "the mouth of " hell;" which, one might suppose, would have been a check to their unbridled, detestable, lusts; but they knew not the facred Scriptures, nor the purity of that holy, omnipotent, God, therein revealed, therefore they feared not the punishment that their iniquities deserved; for on that island Tiberius Cæsar kept boys for his accurfed pleasures, and the remains of their apartments are there to be seen at this day. And it is a natural conclusion, that if the holy Scriptures were as little regarded and esteemed by all men, as they are by fuch objectors, the world (from the awful examples, even in this nation) would be as diffolute and abandoned as were Tiberius, Virgil, &c. The danger of even lightly esteeming those invaluable facred oracles is unutterably great; as the revelation they contain, the glorious, invaluable, truths therein fet forth, are of the very utmost consequence to our present peace and happiness, as well as to our eternal felicity: but to deny their authenticity has a tendency to subvert government and disturb the public tranquillity; for take away the righteous denunciations against fin threatened in the facred writings, and you thereby open a door for the most hardened sinners to commit the greatest enormities; because experience has shewn, that though many have but little dread of human laws, yet, when they have time to reflect, the threatenings of the divine law cause the stoutest hearts frequently to tremble; "which shew the work " of that law to be written in their hearts," and on their consciences, though they too often stifle the monitor till they be ruined eternally.—The holy Scriptures, therefore, must, for no other writings can (with the least degree of propriety), be the umpire in such controverses.

CHAP. I.

Part of Dr. Priestley's assertions given.—Shown to contradict a great number of learned, pious men; the fundamental principles of all the reformed churches in Europe; and oppose the sacred Scriptures of divine truth.

—The old Seaman's assertions stated, and supported by several eminent divines, and other learned gentlemen.—

Twelve irrefutable proofs given to show that אלהים is a plural noun.

But to refume my address:

As you are a philosopher, you know, Sir, that any proposition, that is founded upon a false thesis, will be detected when duly examined, of course its principles will

will be rejected; and if the postulatum has a tendency to produce dangerous errors, or any great evil, the proposer, if he persists in endeavouring to establish his position, will be disregarded, if not despised, by all honest upright men who really esteem truth, probity, and virtue.

Now, Sir, whether or not the following quotation from your writings (exclusive of many other parts that I have omitted) has a dangerous tendency, you will not permit me to determine; nevertheless I have a right, not only to judge for myself, but also to publish my opinion; and likewise to remark upon such opinions of yours as are injurious to our countrymen and fellow citizens; but the position which you endeavour to establish, and the affertion you have made, that I mean chiefly to consider and to animadvert upon, as unutterably dangerous to the best interests of mankind, is as follows:

"I am perfuaded, from the study of the Scriptures, "that Christ * is properly a man—a mere man like "ourselves, naturally possessed of no other powers than other men have;—the son of Joseph and Mary, capable of misapplying the Scriptures of the Old Testament, naturally fallible, peccable, weak; in short, just like other men."

Your affertion is positive; but where are your proofs? I am irresutably certain that such a confirmation, as is indispensably requisite to give your position validity, is not to be found on earth, nor even in hell:

^{*} You cannot mean any other than Jesus Christ, who is called by the apostle, I Cor. ii. 8, " the Kugiov this Society." The Lend of glory." Whether the Apostle's affertion, or Dr. Priestley's, deferves the most credit, will be readily determined by every true Christian.

the former cannot produce the least authentic proof; the inhabitants of the latter dare not attempt it. On the contrary, they voluntarily declared, "We know "thee who thou art, "o ayios, the Holy One of God," Luke iv. 34. As those devils spake Hebrew, we may suppose that they faid (as answering to those Greek words) קרש האלהים, The Holy One of the Aleim. And they prayed to Christ not to torment them, nor cast them into the Abyss. Could any mere man do that? You know it is impossible. See then how your affertion contradicts, not only the Holy Bible, and the articles of the established Church (which I suppose you formerly subscribed), but it is also adverse to the fentiments of all the truly evangelical Diffenters throughout the whole empire. Nor is there any of the reformed churches abroad whose fundamental principles do not militate against you; for which reasons you must produce better authority than any that you have yet advanced, before serious thinking Protestants, evangelical Christians, can possibly be persuaded that you have any other view than to propagate a religion of your own, not founded on the facred Scriptures, the written word of the holy and ever bleffed God; therefore your doctrine is an error that ought to be greatly dreaded; an enthusiastic notion that should be most feriously deprecrated. But you acknowledge that this mere man (as you call him) gave sight to the blind, caused the lame to walk, cleansed the lepers, made the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak, raised the dead, and walked upon the fea; also, "he gives "eternal life." And most of these wonderful acts were foretold; as you may fee, Ifa. xxxv. 4—6, where it is faid, that God fhould come and do those great things, and none but God could perform them: yet Christ performed them; therefore he is God.-

But more of this hereafter. (Compare Ifa. xxix. 18; xxxii. 3, 4; xlii. 7.)

Was I now to continue and advance only flat contradictions to your affertions, I should spend my time unprofitably to myself; and should certainly disappoint those real serious Christians, who may do me the honour to consider my arguments. But it is unavoidably requisite, in order to determine the matter properly agreeable to the strictest, clearest, truth, and the general tenor of the Holy Scriptures, to lay down some method, as well to avoid prolixity, as fully and finally to decide the controversy; though in so doing finally to decide the controversy; though, in so doing, I am constrained to advance an affertion diametrically opposite to that I have already quoted from your publications; which, I confess, would be more uncivil than I wish to be to any one, but that the importance of the subject renders it necessary. For, believe me, Sir, though I abhor your religious principles, I have not the least enmity to your person; on the contrary, I most devoutly beseech the Father of all mercies I most devoutly beseech the Father of all mercies "to grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be renewed in the spirit of your mind, that you may be enabled to comprehend," with every true believer, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, of the love of God in Christ Jesus;" and that you may be "delivered from the power of dark-"ness and translated into the kingdom of his dear "Son;" so that you may have "redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of your sins." And as a happy consequence, may you, "through the "supply of the spirit of Jesus Christ, approve the "things which are excellent, that you may be complete in him," so that "you may be spotless, and "without offence, until the day of Christ, and be filled "with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus C 3 "Christ. "Christ, unto the glory and praise of the" Aleim.—And that the reader may behold the contrast at one view, I exhibit our different affertions in the following order.

Dr. Priestley asserts,

"I am perfuaded, from " the study of the Scrip-" tures, that Christ is pro-" perly a man—a mere " man like ourselves, na-"turally possessed of no " other powers than other "men have." Preface to Lett. p. 2, 8, 10.—" The " fon of Joseph and Mary, " capable of misapplying "the Scriptures of the "Old Testament, natu-" rally fallible, peccable, " weak; in short, just like " other men."

An old feaman has the honour to unite in afferting, with many invaluable characters, that Telus Christ has all the divine names given him; the perfections of Deity ascribed to him; the power of Jebovab manifested in him, and exhibited by him: and all those glorious characters supported by the infallible testimony of the facred Scriptures of divine truth. And also, that the Holy Ghost is a divine and a distinct person in the Godhead.

As your opinion, Sir, flatly contradicts not only the express testimony of the Holy Scriptures (see Matt. i. 21; Luke i. 35), but also militates against the opinion of a great cloud of the most respectable names and the most valuable characters this nation ever produced, no real Christian will admit your assertion, without such proof as you do not even attempt to produce. I have already shewn that the Sacred Scriptures alone must be the umpire in our contest. But when I could not find any sufficient proofs of your opinion in those invaluable records, I said within myself, inyfelf, Is it possible that any gentleman of learning, a professed teacher of Christianity, can insist on a proposition fo contrary to its express interests; a proposition that can have no other tendency than to subvert entirely the religion of Jesus Christ? For, alas! such tendency, and fuch only, have the tenor of the theogical parts of your late publications. Nevertheless, as you bear the honorary titles of LL. D. and F. R.S. fome respect is due thereto. But was you dignified with all the honours that the whole fcientific world could confer, and ennobled by the highest title which the crown could beftow, you would appear little and pitiable in the eyes of every intelligent true Christian, fo long as you endeavour to overturn the great, the glorious, the invaluable, foundation of our most holy religion, by attempting to destroy that unutterably bleffed and comfortable precious doctrine, the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ. Also, as you are generally esteemed a sensible man, it appears strange to me that you did not confider that thinking men cannot accede to your opinion without the fullest proofs; and, wherein the evidence must be of such nature as to accommodate itself to all ranks of men; for, to acquire their concurrence, there must be that fort of notoriety in the evidence which leads the vulgar, the unthinking, the illiterate; and there must also be such proof as shall determine the ingenious, the inquisitive, the learned. But to my great furprise no fuch eviction is to be found in your writings. I will therefore return to my own affertions, and endeavour to prove each under its respective head. Namely, that Jesus Christ is a divine person in the Godhead, &c. &c. See the preceding page.

But beside those, I have also afferted in my title page, C 4 that that there are a plurality of persons in the Godhead; which first claims my attention, and demands proof. The learned Mr. Parkhurft, in his answer to Dr. Priestley, supposes that the doctor "has not much " acquaintance with the Hebrew language;" and having explained that Hebrew, comfortable, divine, name אלהים, Aleim, and proved it to be a plural noun, although frequently constructed with fingular verbs and pronouns; and also, sometimes, with pronouns and verbs plural; of which he gives inftances in Gen. i. 26, 27, and irrefutably proves to every unprejudiced Hebraift, that the word אלהים is a plural noun; it is therefore unnecessary for me to go over the same arguments, especially as I mean to tread on new ground, or endeavour to convince, chiefly by new arguments. But, as that learned gentleman has not given any other translation of those two verses than the common one, it may not be improper for me to give one, that the mere English reader may see clearly that the word אלהים, Aleim, translated God, is a plural noun, and also perceive that it is constructed with both fingular and plural verbs and pronouns.— Gen. i. 26. And the Aleim faid, we will make man in our image, according to our fimilitude, and let him have dominion over the fish of the fea, &c. &c. Ver. 27. So the Aleim created the man after bis external form, according to the image of the Aleim he created him, male and female he created them *.

Farther, the first time we meet with the word באלח. Aleim, is in Gen. i. 1; and, as already shewn, ^{* &}quot; יילים is more than מלש is this expresses the general form, pr delineation; that the conformity, or resemblance of the Parts."

PARKHURST.

" is a plural noun," from the root אלה, Aleh, a curfe, or an oath; " neither is there any other root from " whence it can be derived, without offering great "violence to the established rules of the Hebrew "tongue." (Sermon on the Right Knowledge of God, by the Rev. William Romaine, M.A.) The late Lord Prefident Forbes fays, "In looking over "the radical words of the Hebrew language, one " finds the root אלה, Aleh, to mean an oath, or adjura-"tion; the execration made to affect the breaker of a " covenant; and the genius of the language certainly " admits the word Aleh to be used, from that, to sig-" nify a person that hath taken upon him this oath, " and Aleim, to denote more persons, become subject " to it, or entering into covenant or agreement toge-"ther; and nothing was more common among the " Heathen than the notion, that the fupreme God " could bind himfelf by oath; nay they describe, with " fictitious circumftances, the particular oath that was "immutable; a very extraordinary notion, very far " from being deducible by the light of nature, picked up and maintained univerfally, among the most an-"tient nations that we know of; which tallies won-" derfully with what the Sacred Book (of which they "knew nothing) exhibits, and must therefore have " flowed from the fame original." Thoughts on Religion.

The word Aleim is, in our common Bibles, translated God, when it means the only living and true God; and gods, when it refers to the idols of the Heathen.—Mr. Parkhurst, M. A. says, " בלהים " signifies, the Denouncers of a conditional curse." And the late Rev. Julius Bate, M. A. says, " Aleim is a title of the ever blessed Trinity; it means the "perfons under the oath, or binding curse of "a covenant."—Alfo, the Rev. Alexander Catcott favs, "Aleim fignifies Fæderators, or Covenanters, "upon oath,"—The late very learned Mr. Hutchinson fays, That אלחים, Aleim, has אלחים, Aleh, for its root. "In man who takes an oath, it is to imprecate " a malediction upon himself, if he performs not the "covenant. In Jehovah, or Aleim, it is a conde-"fcenfion to the capacity of creatures; he or they " call their own attributes to witness, and cannot lie. " So אלה, Aleh, is that action which is performed in " making a covenant by oath.—But in these אלהים, " Aleim, it is not only the confederates among them-" felves, the makers of the covenant, the fwearers, those "who had bound themselves to perform the condi-"tions, the witnesses of the oath, the adjurators, but " now the Performers of that oath, fo that we cannot "find any fingle or compound word to express cc Aleim * ."

It

^{*} Agreeable to these characters, I find, Gen. xvii. 16, " By " myfelf, have I fworn, faith Jehovah; ver. 18, in thy feed shall " all the nations of the earth be bleffed " How? or by what means? " Jehovah hath fworn in truth, - of the fruit of thy body will I "fit upon thy throne;" Pf. cxxxii. 11. Again, Pf. lxxxix. 3, " I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto my " beloved." Ver. 35, "I have fworn by my holiness; I will not " lie unto the beloved." Here we find Jehovah swearing that he will be a king, and fit on David's throne. In Pf. cx. 4, " Jeho-" vah swears to Adoni, and will not repent, thou art a Priest for " ever, after the order of Melchizedek" the king of righteousness. Here Jehovah swears unto Adoni: who is Adoni? Isaiah tells us. vi. 1, "He that fitteth upon the throne, the high and lofty One," who faid, ver 8, "Whom shall I fend? and who will go " for us?" But if there be not more persons in Jehovah than one, how could he fwear to Adoni? But Ifaiah, chap. vi. shews who

It would have been unnecessary for me to have taken up so much time to have shewn, from the opinions of others, that the word Aleim is plural, as you, I suppose, must have known or heard that the learned gentlemen above named have published what I have quoted, and much more to the fame purpose; but I have given their declarations on that word for the fake of fome of my unlearned readers, who may, unhappily, have imbibed part of your fentiments, and who might wish to fee my affertion supported by the opinions of fuch valuable authors as those. But, as I have read that you, and fome of your friends, do not admit Aleim, אלהים, to be a plural noun, "but a word "that has no fingular number with a plural termina-"tion, which fometimes influences the adjunct * in "opposition to the fense," I would, therefore, recommend to you, Sir, and others of the fame perfuafion, to examine the 24th chapter of Joshua, 19th verse, where you will find, "Ye cannot ferve Jehovah (for "he is, אליהם קדשים, Aleim Kedshim), the holy "God."—Kedshim is the adjective (holy), is plural masculine, agreeing with Aleim in gender and number; for, if מלהים, Aleim, had been fingular, it would have been קדש, Kadosh, not בקדש, Kcdshim.

who Adoni is, and demonstrates, in connection with this Psalm, the plurality in question. But what answer does Adoni make? Ps. cxix. 106, He says, "I have sworn, and will perform, that I "will keep thy righteous judgments." With the performance of which Jehovah is delighted; for he says, Isa. xlii. 21, "that he is well pleased for the sake of his righteousness; because he shath gloristed (and) supremely magnisted the law." (See the Hebrew of that text.)

Adjunct means "fomething adherent, or united to another. See Johnson's Dict.

Again, in Pfal. lviii. laft verse, I find ששטש שפטי, shophtim; verily the Aleim are Judges. Here שמטי, shophtim, also is a plural noun*, representing the Aleim as a plurality of perfons, and the office (if Imay so express myself) wherein they were engaged.

To support these instances, and prove incontestably that אהיי is plural, I find in Levit. xxi. 7, " Husend; for he is holy unto his God." Hebrew לאלהיי, ki kadosh heva l'Aleiu. Here the word for God is plural, but שקד, kadosh, is singular, because it agrees with אוא, heva, be, meaning the husband; which meaning is fully confirmed and illustrated by Numb. xv. 40; xvi. 3, in the Hebrew. Before I proceed to the second part of my affertion, I will give the true reading of a few more texts to shew that Aleim is plural.

Gen. xxxi. 7, last clause. But the Aleim they suffered him not to hurt me.

xxxv. 7, middle.

Exod. xl. 10, two laft.

Because the Aleim they were revealed unto him there.

Thou shalt fanctify that altar, and it shall be the altar confecrated to the Holy Ones.

* I have fearched all the texts where the word "judgeth" is elsewhere used in the translation, but in every one of these places the word is DDW, shaphat, not DDW, shophtim; but wherever the word is translated "judges," there it is always DDW, shophtim.

† Who were those Holy Ones? Indubitably the divine Persons in the Aleim; for alters were erected and consecrated, or set apart to Jehovah Aleim only (see Gen. xxxiii. 20; Joshua viii. 30), not to creatures. N.B. The word wap, kadosh, literally means " to separate, consecrate, set apart."

Josh.

Josh. xxii. 22.

There is a short text in Deut. vi. 4, which ought to silence every objection to the word בירי (or, which is the same, אלהי, in regimine, or construction), which seems to be introduced very particularly, as of the utmost importance.

Deut. vi. 4.

* שסע ישראל יהוה אלחיכן יהוה אהך. is. ene Jehovah Alei our Jehovah Ifrael O Hear Hear,

* While I was meditating on the subject of these slieets, I accidentally met with two Jews, one of whom understood the English language, for he spake it correctly. I therefore took occasion to ask them how they understood this text (Deut. vi. 4); and how they could read it in the Hebrew without clearly perceiving that there are a plurality of persons in Jehovah. They answered. " אלהים (Elohim), is not always plural, much less אלהים, Eloi:" but gave no reason for their affertion. I am therefore fully fatisfied, that this answer (if it is the general opinion of the present generation of Jews), arises from this Scripture proving so clearly and forcibly the plurality of persons in Jehovah, that they cannot possibly result the evidence in any other way, than by afferting (what they ought to know is) a falfehood; as may be feen from the testimony of their elder brethren, Rabbi Simon Ben Jochai, and Rabbi Limborch; whose testimony is quoted in page 30. And in Pfal. xcvi. 5, we have the fullest proof that min. Alei, is plural as well as מלחים, Aleim; for it is there faid כל-אלהים, all the alei, or gods of the nations, are אלילים, alilim, vain, worthless things of nought. Also Pfal. xcvii. 7, " Worship him" בל אלהים, all gods. But if we read the noun אלהים, Aleim, in the fingular number, fee what nonfenfe it would make. " Wor-" fhip him" all god. Also, that אלהים, and אלהי, are fynonymous, may be clearly manifested by the Hebrew text of Pfal. lix.

Hear, O Ifrael, Jehovah our Alei, is one Jehovah Observe the emphasis which the inspired writer has laid upon the word one; and with admirable propriety: because that " the noun man is singular, and knows " no plural; therefore to fay that Jehovah is One (is " not plural), would be unnecessary, were it not for the " plural word אלה, Alei, whereby men might have " been led into a mistake; to prevent which, this de-" claration was indispensably necessary: namely, that " though in Jehovah there be more Alehs (אלה, Aleh, " is the fingular of שלהים, Aleim), than one, yet " these different Alei were but one Jehovah; one ne-" ceffarily existent Essence, which is allowing a plu-" rality, not of diffinct deities, but of diffinct Aleim " in the same Essence, Godhead in Jehovah, who is One." Lord President Forbes. Also "Rabbi Simon Ben " Jochai, in the Talmudical tract Zohar, on the fixth " fection of Leviticus, fays, come and fee the mystery " of the word Elohim (אלהיכם). There are three de-" grees, and every degree by itself alone (i.e. distinct), " and yet they are all one, and joined together in one, " and are not divided one from another." Mr. Parkburst's Answer to Dr. Priestley.

Likewise "the Jewish Rabbi Limborch tells us, "that in the word Elohim (or Aleim) there are three degrees, each distinct by itself, yet all one, joined in one, and not divided from one another." Lesly's Short Method with Deists and Jews.

last verse. The most scrupulous head, or the most incredulous mind, cannot in reason desire a suller proof of the words אלהים and אלהים being plural, than these Scriptures afford. Jews, Socinians, &c. must all be consounded here; and may the sovereign unmerited grace of the holy Aleim lead them to true unseigned repentance, for Jehovah Jesus' sake. Amen.

"Is this teaching that God, Elohim (or Aleim), is "fimply one? Or rather does it not teach the diffinc-"tions of three persons in one divine Essence?" And coming from the Jews, better evidence ought not to be desired to prove that האלהים is a plural noun.

But attend to some other texts of the facred Scriptures.

- I Sam. iv. 8. Wo unto us! who shall deliver us out of the hand (or from the power) of these illustrious Aleim? These are those Aleim, the smiters of the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderness.
- 2 Sam. vii. 23. And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Ifrael, whom they, the Aleim, went to redeem?

Ecclef. xii. 1. Remember now thy Creators. Ifaiah liv. 5. Thy Makers are thy Husbands.

Having shewn from so great a variety of passages that אלהים, Aleim, is a plural noun, if you will not be convinced from those (and there are not any other writings extant in the whole world to which we can appeal), I am convinced, that if one whom you knew in the flesh should be permitted, or enabled, to come from the abode of death and declare that truth, you would no longer credit the report than the consternation might last, which so unexpected a visit would occasion; for be affured, Sir, that " whoever believes not Mofes and " the prophets, would not be perfuaded though one " should appear to them from the dead." From confidering the very respectable characters for learning, whose names I have quoted, with many others that might have been referred to, which for the fake of brevity brevity I have omitted, together with twelve Scriptures I have quoted, which incontestably prove that Aleim is plural, we may from those perceive the propriety of the expressions in Gen. i. 26, " Let us make man in " our image, after our likeness." See also iii. 22; xi. 6, 7; Isaiah vi. 8. Perhaps it will be said, that in those passages the Aleim is speaking as a king expresses himself when about to do any thing in his magisterial capacity, as if in the name of himself and his privv council. But though a king may fay, Let us enact a law, and let us reason upon the advantages which will apparently refult to our kingdom from that law, he cannot fay (without rifking a fuspicion that his intellects are disordered), Let us create a horse, much less a man with rational faculties; for although it be admitted that " every fpirit can reason, none but the Omnipo-" tent Spirit can create." Beside, it was not likely that infinite Wisdom would adopt the language of earthly kings to express the determination of the divine Aleim, when as yet no man had existence: also, the Hebrew is נעשה, we will make; not, " let us " make;" therefore the cavils of Socinians and Arians are fo very futile, as to find fupport from those only who have determined upon their creed without duly confidering the holy Scriptures. Lastly, we read of a covenant made by the Aleim, Isaiah lv. 3, which is expressed by the inspired writer thus: " Incline your " car and come unto me, hear and your foul shall " live," because I have made for you an everlasting covenant (see the Hebrew of this text), " even the " fure mercies of David." Which St. Paul, Acts xiii. 34, declares to be Christ. And David says, to those that fear him (Jehovah), " he will shew them his co-" venant;" or, as the margin has the fentence, " he "will

" he will make them to know his covenant." Again, Pfal. lxxxix. 3, we have הברית לבחירי, I have made a covenant for my elect. Ver. 34, " My covenant " will I not break." Ezek. xx. 37, " I will bring " you into the bond of the covenant." When was this covenant made in behalf of God's elect? The apostle tells us, Ephes. i. 4, " Before the foundation of the " world." See as unutterably important 2 Tim. i. 9; Titus i. 2; 1 Pet. i. 20; Rev. xiii. 8.—It naturally follows, to ask with whom this covenant was made? With angels? No. With men? There were not any created. But it is shewn with whom: for " it is " now made manifest by the Scriptures of the pro-" phets, and the preaching of Jefus Christ according " to the revelation of the mystery which had been kept " fecret fince the world began, according to the com-" mandment of the everlasting God." Rom. xvi. 25, 26. What have the prophets declared? That " in the " feed of Abraham all the nations of the earth should " be bleffed." See Gen. xii. 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 18; xxvi. 4. The apostle Peter, Acts iii. 25, and the apostle Paul, Gal. iii. 8, 14, 16—18, refer those promises to Christ. But the very nature of a covenant requires at least two parties, otherwise no covenant can be made; in confequence there are more persons in the Aleim than one, or the Aleim could not have entered into that covenant; therefore the noun Aleim, שלהים, must be plural.

But to put this affertion out of all doubt, and render it incontestably certain that Aleim is a plural noun, behold, Sir, with reverence and holy attention, what is written Pfal. lxxxii. 6, אני־אטרתי אלהים אחם And compare this with the Greek of John x. 35, where you will find that he renders the word אלהים, Aleim, Seoi. And the whole passage, Έγω είπα Θεοί έςτε, " I " have faid ye are gods." Then adds, " If he called " them 9886, gods," &c. But please to remember that they are the words of the Lord Jesus Christ, and only recorded by John as his amanuenfis. Do you object to the testimony of this inspired apostle and evangelist, and demand another evidence? This is not difficult to procure; and that as impartial an one as you, or the most incredulous (even an apostate Julian), could reasonably have demanded: I mean the Septuagint; who have translated the above-quoted Hebrew text, Έγω εἶπα Θεοί εςτε; which is exactly as St. John reads it. Must not Jews, Socinians, &c. give up the argument here, or prove (which is impossible) that the Septuagint is a forgery, and that the beloved apostle was not infpired; or that he did not faithfully record the words of his divine Master; nor understand his mother tongue; nor comprehend the difference between Theos and Theoi; though it must be confessed that he lived and preached many years among the Greeks. Alfo Exod. xxxii. 1, reads Aleim; but Acts vii. 40, where Stephen quotes it, fays Theous (accuf. plur.), gods.

The next Scripture which demands our attention, namely Gen. iii. 22, has, I humbly suppose, something of more importance in the original against the opinions of Arius and Socinus than the common translation holds out. Gen. iii. 22, "And (Jehovah, "Aleim) the Lord God said." Here is a new name in addition to that mentioned in Gen. i. 26, neither is it found in any part of that chapter; but before we proceed, it may be necessary to undestand its signification, as well to illustrate the argument as to avoid misconceptions of what may be advanced thereupon. What has been already faid in page 29, on Deut. vi. 4, might fuffice; but I will give the meaning of that word from other authors, for the fatisfaction of those who are unacquainted with the Hebrew, and who may wish for the fullest testimony.

CHAP. II.

The meaning of the name, Thin, Jehovah, given from various learned divines and other learned gentlemen.—A new translation of Gen. iii. 22; xi. 7; xviii. 1, 2, &cc. Isa. vi. 1—3, 8; Gen. iii. 24, with a Note respecting the flaming sword there mentioned.

The Jews term this word ההה, Jehovah, "Shem "Hemphoresh, the sole incommunicable name;" and in reading their prophets, wherever they meet with it they always pronounce it Adanoi, for ארני, Adoni; "from which the Greeks took their Dios, and the "Syrians their Adonis; and from Jehovah Sabaoth, it "is probable that the Greeks gave their Jupiter the "name Jovis Sabasion: but the true meaning of הוחי, is "the effence existing, or felf-existent effence." See a very valuable and important sermon "upon the "Right Knowledge of God," by the Learned and Rev. William Romaine, M. A. wherein those divine names Aleim and Jehovah, are most excellently illustrated *.

^{*} Dr. Priestley says (in his Letters to a Philosophical Unbeliever, Letter xii. p. 195), "I dislike the phraseology of Dr. D 2 "Clark,

I might here produce the affertions of the late learned Professor Robertson, John Hutchinson, Esquire, Dr. Adam Littleton, Lord President Forbes, Mr. Spearman, Mr. John Parkhurst, M. A. &c. but those quotations would fwell this little Tract far beyond the limits I mean to give it. Yet the observations of the learned Mr. Parkhurst are so much to my purpose on the name Jehovah, that I cannot excuse myself from quoting them; as fome of my readers who cannot purchase that gentleman's valuable works may have the fatisfaction of perceiving his attention to whatever might enrich his lexicons beyond what fuch books generally contain. On the word ישרי, fhaddi, he refers to Exod. vi. 3, " I appeared to Abraham, to Isaac, " and to Jacob, באלשדי, as the Lord all bountiful, but " by my name יהוה, Jehovah, I was not known to "them."—" That the name min itself, was known " to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is certain from Gen. " xii. 8; xiii. 4; xxvi. 25; xxviii. 13, 16; and many " other passages; but God was not experimentally " known, or had not displayed himself to them under " the character of Jebovah—as he was now about to " do in a train of aftonishing miracles for the deliver-" ance of his people and the destruction of their ene-" mies. Compare ver. 6-8, which last concludes I " am Jehovah."

In Gen. iv. 26, we find קרא בשם יהוה, to call on [&]quot;Clark, when he fometimes speaks of necessity being the cause of the Divine Existence." So do I; but there is a self-existent Essence who calls himself Jehovah, of whose infinite and eternal Existence we have no proper conceptions, who is necessarily self-existent, but the necessity of his existence is not the cause of it. See Mr. Cruden's definition of the words God and Lord, in his very excellent Concordance.

the name Jehovah. " This expression, when applied to " men, fignifies not only to invoke the true God, but " to invoke him by his name Jehovah, thereby ac-" knowledging his necessary existence, essential perfec-" tions, and infinite superiority over all created be-" ings."-" It feems highly probable that by this " time (A. M. about 231) the name אלהים was be-" come equivocal, being applied both by the believ-" ing line of Seth and by the idolatrous one of Cain, " to their respective gods; and that therefore believers " to diffinguish themselves invoked God by the name " Jehovah. Thus in after times, when idolatry pre-" vailed, we read of Abraham's (Gen. xii. 8), and " of Ifaac's (Gen. xxvi. 25), קרא בשכו יהוה, calling " on the name Jehovah. (Compare 2 Kings v. 11.) "And in that folemn contest between Elijah and the " prophets of Baal, I Kings xviii. Elijah faith to the " people, ver. 21, If Jehovah be God (Heb. האלהים, "The Aleim or Saviours), follow bim, but if Baal, " then follow him; and ver. 24, to the prophets of " Baal, Call ye on the name of your gods (Heb. " אלדוכם, your Aleim), and I will call on the name " Jehovah, which they accordingly did respectively. " Compare ver, 26, 36, 37." And ver, 38 shews the event; ver. 39 the people's confession; for "they " all fell prostrate on their faces, and they faid, Je-" bovah he the Aleim, Jehovah he the Aleim."-" That " this divine name Jehovah was well known to the " heathen there can be no doubt. Diodorus Siculus, " lib. i. fpeaking of those who attributed the framing " of their laws to the gods, fays, Para tois Joudaiois " Mófén istorousi ton ΙΔΩ epikaloumenon Theon. " Among the Jews they report that Moses did this to " the God called Fac."

" Varro, cited by St. Austin, says, ' Deum Jude-" orum esse Jovem. Jove was the God of the Jews." " And from ידוה, Jehovah, the Etruscans seem plainly " to have had their Juve or Jove; and the Romans " their Jovis or Jovis-pater, i. e. Father Jove, after-" wards corrupted into Jupiter. And that the idola-" ters of feveral nations, Phenicians, Greeks, Etruf-" cans, Latins, and Romans, gave the incommuni-" cable name mm, with fome dialectical variation, to " their false gods, may be seen in an excellent Note in " the Ancient Universal History, Vol. xvii. p. 274, " &c."—" From this fame divine name the Greeks " had their exclamation of grief, Iou, as Iou, Iou Dus nue; " and the Romans theirs of triumph, Io, Io triumphe, " both of which were originally addresses to Jehovah." I have dwelt fo long on the divine names Aleim and Jehovah, that the unlearned readers (for whose fakes chiefly I write) may be enabled to comprehend the arguments more clearly I mean to bring forward, to prove the accurfed herefy Dr. P. is endeavouring (I hope ignorantly) to propagate.

I now return to the confideration of Gen. iii. 22, wherein, as I before observed, there is something of much greater importance in the original, to overturn the opinions of Arius and Socinus, than the common translation leads us to understand; which I humbly suppose ought to be read as follows:-And Jehovah Aleim faid, Behold the man hath been as one from us, who must experience good and evil *.

Again,

^{*} Behold the man-היה (Montanus reads it fuit), hath been-ממנו, as one, מנו, mimenu, would from us, מנו, would have been sufficient to have fignified or expressed, " from us;" but as the

Again, Gen. xi. 7, Come we will descend, and we will confound there their language (perhaps their religious sentiments). Hebrew now. Lip *.

Gen. xviii. 1, 2, And Jehovah again appeared unto him, in the grove of oaks, near Mamre, as he fat in a tent-door about the heat of the day. Ver. 2, When he lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold three men hovering † above him, and he feared (or reverenced), the word seems a compound of מנו and מנו, I understand it to have an additional fignification; and that the first n, is an abbreviation of the pronoun 'n, zuko; the ', jed, being omitted as in Isa. xlviii. 17, where I find the p prefixed, and translated " which" (i. e. who) twice. The Masorites have also pointed that n in Gen. iii, 22, with hiric parvum; לרעת, the infinitive of איר, to experience, &c. with 5, lamed, prefixed; -must experience. And as a proof of this being proper, I refer to Judg. i. 19, where is rendered "could;" 1 Chron. xv. 2, "ought;" Either. iv. 2, "might;" Ecclef. iii. 14, " can;" I Chron. xxii. 5, " must." See Mr. Parkhurst's Heb. and Eng. Lex. under 5, p. 317. Beside, the common reading has not any thing to recommend it; for furely the fin of Adam had not affimilated him to the Deity that man should have thereby become as one of the Aleim, therefore the common translation requires amendment, and I humbly hope that which I have given is agreeable to the divine original.

* The plural number is here fo indubitably expressed in the translation I have given it, which is the true reading, that it would be an infult to every common understanding to attempt to prove it by any comment.

† If EDIZI be a participle, as a renowned Hebraist hath rendered it (but I confess both the marks of a participle are wanting), then hovering may be very proper. Neither is it a verb, as the translators have rendered it; but it most certainly has all the marks of a noun plural, from the root DYI; and if rendered aright in 1 Sam. x. 5, and 2 Sam. viii. 6, 14, garrisons, then it signifies stationed soldiers; which implies defenders, protectors. In Gen. xxxii. 2, the visible appearances of the Aleim are called Mahanaim, "encountered campers;" therefore, these, agreeable to the construction of renced), but hasted to meet them from the tent-door, and bowed himself to the earth *.

In Isaiah vi. 1, "In the year that king Uzziah "died, I saw also the Lord (Hebrew, Adoni); he sat "upon the throne high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple." Ver. 2, Around him † stood the feraphim;

in Samuel, may justly be rendered three men protectors, or defenders; because garrisons are places of protection and defence.

* The word with I have rendered hovering, is in 1 Sam. x. 5, 2 Sam. viii. 6, 14, rendered "garrisons;" and it is highly probable that the word here may imply, that the three men were suspended above Abraham in appearance, so united as if but one. If they had been flanding by Abraham he would have had no occasion to run to meet them. But the first verse says, Jehovah appeared to him; and the fecond verse says, this appearance of Jehovah was that of three men; and it should be remarked, that after Abraham had paid obeisance to them, he addresses them as one in essence, though the real number of persons were three: for he says, ver. 3, " My Lord, Heb. אדני, Adoni, if now I have found fa-" vour in thy fight," I pray thou wilt not pass away from thy fervant. Ver. 4, A little water shall now be brought, and wash ve your feet, and recline ye under this tree. Ver. 5, I will fetch a morfel of bread, and comfort ye your hearts, after that pass ye on; for therefore came re to your fervant. And they faid, So do as thou hast spoken. Ver. 9, And they said unto him-Ver. 10, I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life; and lo! Sarah thy wife shall have a son. And Sarah heard-Ver. 12, "Therefore Sarah laughed."-Ver. 13, Then Jehovah faid unto Abraham, Wherefore did Sarah laugh?-Ver. 14, Is any thing too hard for Jehovah? At the time appointed I will return unto thee, " and Sarah shall have a fon."-Is it possible that any fensible man can read this xviiith chap, of Genesis, and not see that there are a plurality of persons in sehovah, incontestibly expressed by the word Aleim in other places of the Holy Scriptures?

† " Lround him stood the seraphim, &c." In taking the liberty to alter the common reading so essentially, it is requisite that I should assign a proper reason. 1st, The Septuagint render the pas-

feraphim; each had fix wings, with twain hiding his faces *, with twain concealing his feet, and with twain flying fwiftly †. Ver. 3, And they proclaimed one concerning fage " κυκλω αυτου," round about of it, or him. 2. The Hebrew is ממעל לו. It must be confessed, that if the words had been defigned to have fignified no more than "upon it," or "above it," של לו would have fufficiently expressed that; but as the p is doubled, it is reasonable to suppose that it has a different meaning: for is fometimes rendered " lifting up, &c." and n, when prefixed, " before, in the prefence of, &c. &c." I am also of opinion, that " flood," in ver. 2, is not the literal meaning of manner: it perhaps may mean their standing, or station, a plural word in regimine, agreeing with feraphim, with the n postfixed as a pronoun. It is rendered Pfal. cxlviii. 6, " established;" Judg. xvi. 25, "pillars;" also 1 Kings vii. 15, &c, "pillars." Therefore I reasonably suppose, that the passage may be read, The seraphim in their standing (or station) furrounded him; for observe, He is the high and lofty one. (See Hebrew of Isa. lvii. 15, which are the very same words as are rendered in the first verse of this chapter, " high and lifted up.") Therefore the feraphim were not שמעל לו above him." Adoni fat upon the throne, for which reason לו cannot with the least propriety be read, " upon it," because the throne was already occupied; therefore, around him, feems to me the best reading of the words, and as such I have rendered them.

* "The two wings that covered the feet (fays Mr. Parkhurst) fignified the fecrecy and inferutibility of the divine proceedings; two, their energy or rapidity; and those covering the feraphs faces, denoted that they whom the feraphs represented were in wrath, hiding their faces (compare Isa. liv. 8; lix. 2; lxiv. 7), from the Jewish people." But we never read of Jehovah's hands or cars being covered. No: his hands are always open to protect his people, and to supply their wants; and his ears are ever open to their cries; so that whatever they ask in faith, agreeable to his revealed will, they are sure to receive; for if he has bestowed six mercies, the prayer of faith shall obtain the seventh; that is, a full supply of all their need, as far as shall be for his own glory and their good.

† The word אַניעי, is a participle benoni, or active; where the being doubled, shews the repetition or intensences of the action; therefore cerning another, and faid, Holy, holy, holy Jehovah of Hofts! the whole earth is full of his glory.—Ver. 8, "Alfo I heard the voice of (Hebrew, Adoni *) the Lord, faying, whom fhall I fend, and who will go "for us?" ילוי ילוי לויי.

I am of opinion that there is a proof of the plurality of the divine perfons in the Godhead, in Pfalm xxxiii. ver. 6, which is much obscured by the translation of our Bibles. I humbly suppose it should be read as follows:

Pfal. xxxiii. 6, By the Word Jebovah the heavens were made, and all their hoft, ברוח בי, by the command † of his Spirit.

therefore I have rendered the word, flying fwifily; and require to be translated, he shall cover; but as the participle benoni signises "intermediate," I have rendered the verbs in the present tense.

* Adoni. Here we have another of the adorable names by which the Godhead have been pleased to make themselves known in the Holy Scriptures. " אוא, Adoni, from the root אוא, with a form- ative and and fignifies a Ruler, Director, Sustainer, Lord; from whence, most probably, the idol Adonis had his name."— Here I beg leave to remark, that " names in the Hebrew Bible were not given arbitrarily as among us; they always denoted fome quality or character of the persons or things to which they referred, or on which they were imposed."

† γρ is a noun in regimine, and as such denotes command or order; for γρ, is translated commandment, Gen. xiv. 21; Exod. xvii. 1; Eccles. viii. 2. I suppose that not any person will exclude the Father in the creation, because it is written, Isa. lxiv. 8, "But now Jehovah thou art our Father, we the clay, and thou our Fermer, "and we all are the work of thine hand."—With respect to the roord Jehovah, Psal. xxxiii. 6, it undoubtedly means the Logos (Christ); for the Septuagint read it, " Τω λόγω του πυριου οι " δυζωροί ερεφεωθησων. By the Logos of the Lord (Jehovah, Heb.) the heavens were established.

After

Before I enter upon the proofs of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, it may be necessary to observe, that there was a piece of facred furniture erected by the express command of Jehovah, both in the tabernacle of Moses and in the temple of Solomon, which seem to have been hieroglyphic emblems of the divine Trinity, with the manhood comprised; and the overlooking of this, or not duly attending to it, leaves much obscurity on many important texts, which that may lead to the comprehension of; I mean the cherubim.

The first mention made of it is in Gen. iii. 24. But as that text is not accurately translated, I will endeavour to give a better reading of it, as follows:

Gen. iii. 24, So he expelled the man, and placed the cherubim eastward of the garden Eden, and an emblematical instrument of fire turning itself to direct the way to the tree of lives*. See Exed. xxv. 22; Num. vii. 89; Ps. lxxx. 1; xcix. 1.

CHAP.

After all these proofs, surely no one that believes the Holy Bible to be the word of God can any longer doubt that there are a plurality of persons in the Godhead.

* The Hebrew words, translated "a flaming sword," in our Bibles, are החרם they are both nouns fingular; and לחט החרם (in the plural לחמי,) is translated, Exod. vii. 11, " inchantments," which imply fomething hidden under what appears; i. e. mystical, or emblematical. - Also the m, before the noun ann, is only emphatic in this place; and the root ann, as a verb, fignifies " to drain off, " dry up, lay waste, destroy, consume, make desolate, &c. And as a " fubflantive, any diminishing, wasting, or desolating, instrument; " as a found draining the body of its blood; Gen. xxvii 40; " xxxiv. 23. A kn fe; Josh. v. 2, 3. A aagger; Jud iii 21, " 22. An axe; Ezek. xxvi. 9." All these fignifications, confidered, lead me to suppose that we may justly translate these two fubstantives, בחחה לחם, lahat hackereb, an emblematical destroying instrument, or an instrument of sire; and, possibly, was sigurative of the infirument whereon the blood of the divine Jesus was to be drawn

CHAP. III.

A description of the Cherubim, its signification, import, and end.—The writer's opinions supported by the testimony of the heathen, and several learned gentlemen, as well as by several parts of the Holy Scriptures.

Having given my reasons for altering the 24th verse of Gen. chap. iii. it is now requisite to consider why such a figure was made, or such a representation erected, as the cherubim; for as it was there placed by drawn from his most blessed body, a cross, +; and in that reprefentation might point as a directory to the cherub m. first spoken of in this text; Gen. iii. 24. For as it is described, as turning itself every way, I know not of any figure which could be formed that would turn more eafily upon its base, or in its turning, so naturally and constantly (at every point of view) direct to the object it was intended as a directive to; namely, the cherubim, which was the semporary habitation of Jehovah, as may be feen by comparing Exod. xxv. 22, with Num. vii. 89; Pfal. lxxx. 1; xcix. 1; and, perhaps, might be defigned as a perpetual memorial to the church, prior to Christ's incarnation, that they should observe this (the cherubim) as a mean of leading to the true knowledge of the tree of life (rather lives, for the Hebrew word min is plural), and may imply life spiritual; life eternal. I should also observe that ont, as a noun, fignifies " flame, or ignited matter;" therefore if it should not be allowed that lahat hachereb will admit of being translated an emblematical (it cannot be denied that it means an) inthrument of fire. Also, nonnnnn, hammithapeket, is a participle benoni, in hithpael; and, לשמר, lishmar, is translated as a verb; Pfal. cxix 5, " directed;" whereby, I am countenanced in translating the word in the infinitive, as it has, b, the fign of the infinitive prefixed. Should Dr. P. or any other gentleman, dislike the translation I have given of Gen. iii. 24, he may oblige the public by giving a better, as the common one is most certainly inaccurate. Perhaps, by Jehovah himself, it was indisputably set up for some great and important end. Although the prophet Moses has omitted to give a description of the cherubian in this place, Ezekiel has supplied the desiciency, and given a very particular representation of their sigure; chap. i. ver. 4—11. We have also their dimensions and place in the Mosaic tabernacle; Exod. xxv. 18, 20. And their position; Exod. xxxvii. 7—9. Also their enlarged dimensions, &c. in Solomon's Temple; 1 Kin. vi. 23—29. Again, their end and intention are shewn; 1 Kin. viii. 6, 7; 2 Chron. v. 7, 8; namely, to protect and establish the everlasting covenant. For those manifest that the covenant of the Elohim, or Aleim, is under the immediate continual

Perhaps, it might be read, He (Jehovah) dwelt, or tabernacled in the cherubim, on the east of the garden Eden, and an instrument of fire, turning itself, directed the way to the tree of lives; for the very same word pum is rendered, Gen. xix. 27, he shall dwell. See also Gen. xvi. 12; Deut. xxxiii. 12, ct cl.

I beg leave only to add, that the late learned and Rev. Mr. Catcott fays, " The root pre fecen, figrifies to dwell, or inhabit: " and the first time it occurs in Scripture, is in Gen. iii. 24, and " is there spoken of the residence of the divine presence in the che-" rubon. And we read, Exod. xxv. 1, 8, Jehovah spake unto " Mofes, faying, ver. 8, Let them make me a fanctuary, ישכנתי, " veshakanti, that I may dwell, or tabernacle, among them." When he quotes, John i. 14, "The work was made" (rather became) "flesh, and dwelt (seament, eskenosen, tabernacted) " among us." " The Jews, when disputing with the primitive " Christians, could not get clear of the true meaning of the words " of this text, Gen. iii. 24, without confessing that they lead to the " idea of a Trinity of pertons, and to Jehovah's incarnation; but " not being willing to : liow that, in its fullest and proper figni-" fication, t' y have tince pertuaded themselves, that the word 46 cherubim fignifies angels:37 which strange notion too many have given into that ought to know better.

inspection of the divine Persons represented by the cherubim. See Pf. xci. 4; cvi. 45.—In Ezek. xli. 18-20, 25, we have an abridged account of the cherubim, fomewhat differing from the others; and which might have been fo placed for the following purpose: that, wherever they cast their eyes when worshipping in the temple, it might lead them to him whom the young lion and man represented, Christ; fo that the palm-tree between the face of the lion and the face of the man, might prefigure the peace which Christ should make for man. It may therefore be necessary, first, to inquire what this cherubim reprefented, and the probable meaning of the representation.—The first time we find the cherubim mentioned, after this, is in Exod. xxv. 18, where Jehovah commanded Moses to make two cherubim of gold of beaten work; and ver. 19th informs us, that they were to be made מן־הכפרת of the matter of the propitiatory, or mercy-feat, and to be placed at the two extremities thereof; and the 20th verse directs that their wings flould cover the mercy-feat, and their faces were to look one to another. (Compare Exod. xxxvii. 8, 9; and 2 Chron. iii. 13.) Toward the mercy-feat shall be the faces of the cherubim; and ver. 22 fays, "There I " will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee, " from above the mercy-feat, from between the two "cherubim."-" And when Mofes was gone into " the tabernable—then he heard the voice of one speak-" ing unto him from off the mercy-feat-from be-"tween the two cherubim." Num. vii. 89. Here we have not any description of the figures of the che--rubing only that by having faces they were plural; nor does it appear that the workmen had any pattern to make them by, as they had of the other parts of the facred furniture, recorded Exod. xxv. xxvi.; in which, at the 8th verse, we find "they wrought che-" rubim in the curtains of the tabernable of fine twifted "linen, in colours of blue, purple and scarlet;" from which we may suppose that the figures of the cherubim were well known to the artificers. I believe it is generally acknowledged that the Teraphin, mentioned Judg. xvii. 5; xviii. 14, 20; Hof. iii. 4; (and in the Hebrew of Gen. xxxi. 19, 34, 35, improperly translated "images"), were a portable representation of the cherubim; because, in Gen. xxxi. 30, 32, Laban calls those images (Heb. Teraphim) his gods; path; and, as among the Heathen, both in very ancient times and later, they had many compound images; " fo we find that the Teraphim were in use among "believers, as the above texts shew; they were also in " use among unbelievers, as may be seen in the Hebrew of 2 Kin. xxiiii. 24; Ezek. xxi. 21; Zech. x. 2; and " feem to have been their penates, or household gods, as "the Tyrians, Virgil, Æn. iv. lin. 21, who burned "incense to them, Æn. i. lin. 708; the Trojans, Æn. "i. lin. 382, from whom the Romans derived their's. "The Trojan penates, according to Virgil, Æn. ii. " lin. 510, &c. were placed in the open air, near a great " altar, and under the fhade of an ancient laurel; and, " after being faved from the conflagration of Troy by "Æneas, we find them furrounded with a glory, and "giving him oracular directions. Æn. iii. lin. 148, &c. "Compare Jud. xviii. 5, 6; Ezek. xxi. 21; Zech. x. " 2." See Parkhurft's Heb. and Eng. Lex. p. 646. The next Scripture account we have of the cherubim is in 1 Kin. vi. 23-35. Here also we have no particular description of their figure; so that, when the Jews erected the second temple, in the time of the prophets Ezra and Nehemiah, they were fo much unacquainted, not only with the meaning, but also the figure of the cherubim, that, if it had not been for Ezekiel's visions, we should not have had any knowledge respecting them. But as the clear comprehending of these figures was of high import, it pleafed God to shew to that prophet, by repeated visions, the figure of those emblems which he has carefully recorded in the 1st and xth chapter of his prophey; and, though the Jews believe Ezekiel to have been a true prophet of God, and his writings to have been inspired, they did not pay that attention to those visions that might have been naturally expected; and which feem to have been given the prophet, on purpose to remind the Jews of the neceffity of their having their place in the holy of holies, in the temple they were about to build, as in that of Solomon, which fome of their old men must have remembered; and it is the more furprifing, as the Jews agree to this day, that "those visions contain the most "important mystery; and, in the description of them, the prophet has been fo very particular as to render it almost impossible to mistake the great outlines of it. In chap. i. 1, the prophet describes his situation "among the captives by the river of Chebar;" when "the heavens were opened, and he faw" by vifions the Aleim .- Verse 2, "In the fifth day of the month, "in the fifth year of King Jehoiakim's captivity-"Ver. 3, The word Jehovah came expressly unto "Ezekiel the prieft.—Ver. 4, And behold a whirl-"wind came out of the north, a great cloud and a fire " infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out " of the midft thereof as the colour of amber out of the " midst of the fire. - Ver. 5, Also out of the midst thereof " came  came the likeness of four living beings, and this was "their appearance, they had the likeness of a MAN—Ver. "6, And every one had four faces, and every one " had four wings .- Ver. 8, And they had the hands " of a man under their wings, on their four fides.-"Ver. 10, As for the likeness of their faces, they four " had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the "right fide, and they four had the face of a bull on "their left fide, they four also had the face of an eagle. "-Ver. 11, Thus were their faces, and their wings "were stretched upwards, two wings of every one "were joined one to another, and two covered their " bodies.—Ver. 26, And above the firmament, that " was over their heads, was the likeness of a throne, "as the appearance of a faphire stone, and upon the " likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appear-"ance of a man above upon it." In the tenth chapter the prophet gives a fimilar description of the cherubim, as in the first chapter, and in verse 17, last clause (Hebrew), because the spirit of life was in them. But the 20th verse is very remarkable. "This is the liv-"ing" being "that I faw" in the place " of the God of " If rael, by the river of Chebar, and I knew that they were the cherubin." If there was no other proof that the cherubim, a compound figure, was meant to represent one living being, furely the 20th verse (taken in connection with the other parts of the chapter) ought to determine it; and, as I observed before, is an intelligible representation of the persons in the divine Trinity, with the manhood comprised. St. Paul, Heb. ix. 5, describing the furniture in the holy of holies, mentions "the cherubim of glory." And we find the 18th verse of Ezek, chapter x. mentions that "the "glory of Jehovah stood over the cherubim." " Knowing F.

"Knowing thus from Ezekiel the form of the cheru-" bim, and knowing the usage of the most ancient "nations, particularly the Egyptians, of forming compounded figures of this kind, for hierogly-"phical or fymbolical purposes, from the remains of their antiquities, still extant," we cannot entertain any doubt that this representation was highly significative; and that the cherubim, compounded of bull, man, lion, and eagle, were intended to fignify feveral characters, powers, or perfons, united together in one. Nor were the Egyptians fingular in compounding the figures of their deities. "The Italian Janus had two "faces, fometimes four; Diana at Ephefus had three; " and many Egyptian monuments shew two, sometimes "three, heads of different creatures to one body." "In "vast numbers of Gems, particularly those called "Abraxa's, human bodies have the heads, fometimes " of dogs, fornetimes of lions, fometimes of eagles, or "hawks, &c." and it can fearcely be doubted "that " each of those representations was fymbolical." Lord Prefident Forbes. If it should be asked how the Egyptians, &c. first conceived the idea of forming those strange compounds, as the building of the tabernacle was not fo early as to give rife thereto? It should be remembered that the cherubim was immediately exhibited upon man's expulsion from Paradise, and was fo well known, when the Ifraelites left Egypt, that the workmen fashioned the figures of it without any direction, as already observed, page 46. May we not therefore safely infer, that "the compound sigures of the " ancients, to represent their deities, had no other ori-" ginal but that at the entrance of the garden of Eden?" Nevertheless, in process of time, "they separated "those fymbols, supposed the different figures to be " different " different deities, and at last worshipped them apart." For instance, "the Egyptians had their Apis, the "bull;" "the Persian Mithras was in all the devices " of the worshippers of that idol, pictured a lion, or with "a lion's head; and the Egyptian Sphinx, which stood " at the entrance of their temples, had only two of the " cherubical figures joined in a strange manner, the "head of the man put upon the body of the lion." "The eagle was to the Greeks and Romans an em-"blem facred to Jupiter, or Jovis, their great god, "whom they pictured like a man;" therefore, "from "the application made by the ancient Pagans to each " of the figures in the cherubim to fignify a different " deity, we may with reason conclude that they under-" ftood that particular figure in the cherubim, which "they choose for their protector, or deity, represented " in the hieroglyphical usage of the early times, the "power, the thing, or person, that they intended to " ferve."

"Thus, for example, if the curled hairs and horns in the bull's head were, in hieroglyphical writing, made the emblem of fire in general, or fire at the orb of the fun, those who took material fire for their deity, would set up that emblem and worfhip it."

"If the lion's piercing eyes," his mane, his colour, or, &c. occasioned "that animal to be the emblem of "light in general, or of light issuing from the body of "the fun, such as took light" for the object of their worship, might esteem the lion a proper emblem.

Or, "if the eagle's foaring flight, and commerce thereby with the air, brought that bird to be the emblem of air, fuch as imagined a divinity in the air, in

" clouds, in winds, would take that bird to represent their deity."

And the buman figure in the cherubim must, one should suppose, be the most natural occasion of that universal mistake which all the Heathen, at length, dropped into of picturing their gods with human bodies, and the very earliest gave some countenance to, in joining parts of the human body, to, almost, all their representations of their gods. "We know" (fays Lord President Forbes) "from many texts of Scripture, " and from many passages in Heathen historians and "Mythologists" (relators or expositors of the ancient fables of the Heathen), "that the objects of the ear-" liest Pagan adoration, after losing the idea of the true "God," and his determined incarnation (which the cherubim was, most probably, intended to keep in remembrance), " were the powers in the heavens that "were supposed to maintain this system, the sun, moon, " and ftars, the hoft of heaven, the queen of heaven; " fire, which was supposed to be one of the chief agents, " in supporting the motion of the universe; light, iffu-"ing from fire; and the air, clouds, winds, &c. which "had infinite force, and were supposed to act a very " confiderable part in the government and preferva-"tion of the material world.—In particular we know "that fire, at the orb of the fun, was worshipped by " the ancient Egyptians, who made use of Apis, the "bull, for their emblem; and that the worshippers of "Baal, the heifer, believed their god had the command " of fire," as may be gathered from 1 Kings xviii. " Therefore it is no rash conclusion that 22-39. "the bull's head was the hieroglyphical emblem of "fire, perhaps fire at the orb of the fun."

"There

"There were feveral temples in Egypt and Canaan " to the light of the fun; and in Egypt, as well as in " Perfia, the lion was a facred emblem. Wherefore, "it feems highly probable, the lion was used as the "fymbol, or emblem of light, as the bull was made "use of as the emblem of fire."—" It is also well " known that the earliest Heathen took the air, wind, "that which in the ancient languages is expressed by "a word fignifying, promifcuoufly, wind and fpirit, "that invisible agent which we feel, and wich per-" forms fo many confiderable effects in nature without "being feen;" this they also held as "a deity, and " to it they ascribed inspiration. Their sibyls," that is, " deliverers of oracles," "were inflated. Futurities, the " will of their god, was discovered by the countenance " of clouds, and the flight of birds, which were reli-"giously observed by Augurs (in the Hebrew, "cloud-mongers). Thunder was the voice of their "god, which was portentous and much observed. "Thunder was ascribed to the great Jove, the thun-"derer; and the eagle, with the thunderbolt, was his " enfign. Whence we may pretty fafely conclude, that "the eagle, to the worshippers of the air, represented, "hieroglyphically, air, wind, spirit."

"If the deity, to give some idea of himself from a self-ensible object, had made choice of the heavens as that sensible object, from which to take the impersect idea of his immensity, personality, manner of existence, and operation; if, by the vastness and extent of them, his immensity was to be represented; if, by fire the first named person, necessarily and continually generating and sending forth light the second named person, and constantly and necessarily supplied by air or spirit, the third named person; the Trinity co-

" existing, and co-operating, for the support of the "whole, and in aid of each other, was to be repre-fented; then, upon discovering this to mankind, the " heavens would become the type of Jebovah, the divine " effence; fire would become the type of the first named " person; light of the second; and air or spirit of the "third; fo that whatever emblems, in hieroglyphical "writing," or reprefentations, "were used to express "these, as the names of the one, would or might be "used for the appellations or names of the other." "From all which we may perceive, that if this refem-" blance, or reprefentation, should be expressed in stone, "wood, or metal, the emblems of fire, light, and air, " or fpirit; that is, from what has been faid, the bull, "the lion, and the eagle, ought to be conjoined toge-"ther into the form of one animal; then every body, "who understood the hieroglyphical emblems, would " be immediately led to think on the heavens which "they represented; and, from thence, raise to himself the " intended image of the Trinity in the divine effence." " It calls for very particular attention, that the first, " and the grand mistakes in religion, proceeded from " taking literally, what was meant figuratively, or em-" blematically only; and fo denying in effect the fym-" bolical meaning; for whatever pretence a revela-

"tion, recorded in words by writing, might have to be fo (literally) understood, fure it was extremely perverse to take pictures only for the original things, or persons designed to be exhibited by those pictures."

"The first who wandered from the truth mistook the heavens, fire, light, and air, or spirit, for what they were intended to represent, the invisible holy "Trinity; and as such worshipped them, using the "figures

* figures of the bull, the lion, the eagle, only as hiero-"glyphical reprefentations of those powers which they "truly were intended to be. But, in process of time, "their fucceffors forgetting the supposed influence of "those powers in the air or heavens, and observing " religious fervice paid to the forms of those animals, "made a fecond miftake; looked no more to the hea-" vens, as their gods, but flupidly imagined a deity to " be inherent in those graven or molten images which "they worshipped and ferved, and from whom they "looked for favour and protection." See Exod. xx. 4, 5. " It was also taking fymbols for realities that " led men to suppose a purifying quality in the blood " of beafts, which also led them to fancy that Heca-"tombs, flaughtered, appeafed the Deity; and that "God was delighted with the smoke which arose from "the fat of burnt-offerings." But though the Heathen fell into those abfurd and abominable mistakes, it may be fully and clearly proved, from holy Scripture, that the cherubim were intended for the most valuable purposes of information; and, when first placed at the garden of Eden, their fymbolical meaning was indifputably explained to Adam, and by him to Eve; or elfe they might have supposed those symbols set up as objects of worship, and paid adoration to them as such. But when he was told that the bull, the lion, and the eagle, were the fymbols of fire, light, and air, or spirit, having been made acquainted with the powers and use of each of those elements, as he had been of all the properties of nature, as appears from his understanding the properties of all the creatures, fo as to give them names applicable to their nature, he would eafily comprehend how those emblems might be symbolical of the characters or persons in the divine essence; for, E 4

"whatever occasion man might have had for the "knowledge of the distinction of persons in the Deity, " before the fall, it feems certain the manner of his " falvation, after his defection, could not have been "imparted to him without revealing that truth" (namely the diffinction of persons in the Godhead), " undiscoverable by the light of nature. He could "not possibly know by what means, or upon what " account, his fins were to be pardened, and himself " reinstated in the favour of God, without being told "that the Deity confifts of three persons; that, of those "three, pursuant to a covenant made before the crea-"tion *, the fecond" named "was to take on him "flesh, and in the form of man to suffer, and thereby " atone for the fins of mankind; and that the third" named "was to keep a communication with the fouls " of men for their guidance and comfort; and man " could not possibly keep up, with any certainty, the "memory of this revelation without fome memorial, " fome fymbolical act or thing to preferve it; or look " upon fuch fymbol (knowing the fense of it) without " gratefully confessing his obligations to those divine " persons to whom he owed his being, his comfort, his " falvation."

^{*} We read, Ephes. i. 4; 2 Tim. i. 9; Titus i. 2, "of a choice; persons chosen in Christ before the world began;" and in Gen. ix. 9, of God's establishing his covenant with Noah, which implies it had been made before. And the Psalmist says, Psal. lxxiv. 20, "Have respect unto the covenant." And Isa. liv. 10, "Neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith Jehovah."

Lord President Forbes.

It is not only the hieroglyphical representation in the cherubim that deserves particular consideration, from the figures of which it was compounded, but also the rank the cherubim had in the tabernacle and in Solomon's temple.

I have already shewn from various Scriptures, that the cherubim were to be made out of the matter of the mercy-seat, which they were to cover with their wings, and that, standing at each extremity of that mercy-seat, their faces were to look towards each other, and towards the mercy-seat, and that from thence Jehovah would commune with Moses, Exod. xxv. 22; and from Numb. vii. 89, it appears he did speak to Moses agreeable to that promise. Nor was his residence there confined to the days of Moses; for we find in Psalm lxxx. 1, the prophet says, "Give car, O thou Shep-" herd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a slock; "thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth."

See also Psal. xcix. 1. From which (Scriptures) it appears, that the space between the two cherubim is described particularly as the place of the residence of the Deity, and of his appearance, and from thence to make his will known. "Besides this, there was a " stated folemn ceremony to be performed once a year, " on the day of expiation, before the mercy-feat; the " high priest was to bring within the vail the blood of "the fin-offering, and with that to make atonement " for all the people by fprinkling of the blood upon " the mercy-feat, and feven times before it; and the " blood fo fprinkled is faid to expiate." Also a charge was given, "that the high priest (Levit. xvi. 12, 13) " should take a censer full of burning coals of fire from " off the altar before the face of Jehovah, and his hand " full of fweet incense beaten small, and bring them " within the vail; and he shall put the incense upon " the fire before the face of Jehovah, that the cloud " of the incense may cover the mercy-seat which is " above the testimony, that he die not."

Why is the mercy-feat to be covered? Because Jehovah says, ver. 2, " I will appear in the cloud upon " the mercy-feat."

"The atoning blood, in this higheft and most folemn act of the Mosaical institution, was sprinkled on that part of the mercy-seat towards which the several faces of the cherubim were directed; and if they were to see, they had not any object to look at on this solemn day of expiation but the priest in the holy garment, the emblem of the second named person, the light, sprinkling the blood on and towards the mercy-seat; which could hardly sail to raise the idea, that the blood so sprinkled was the object that the divine persons whom these sigures

" (in the cherubim) represented, looked upon as the " propitiation, the ranfom, the atonement." " if it was necessary towards making this emblem fully " perfect to reprefent all the perfons as looking upon " and accepting this blood, then it was requifite to " make two feveral complete cherubin, and to place " them, as the prophet describes, at the different ex-"tremities of the mercy-feat, that the faces of each " figure (or cherub) might be directed towards the " very spot whereon the blood was to be sprinkled; " because, had there been no more than one repre-" fentation of the figures in the cherubim, two only of " the four faces could have been directed to the place " on which the blood was to be fprinkled," and Jehovah could not have dwelt between them. "Be-" fides, whoever believes that the covenant (from " which the appellation Aleim arose) was made, or " entered into by the Aleim from the beginning, and " was intimated to Adam upon the fall, or when the " purpose of mercy was first revealed; and when, for " explaining and recording that purpose of grace, the " whole emblematical inflitution was appointed, and " the cherubim exhibited, he will readily admit that " the position of the two compound figures with their " faces looking towards each other, and at the mercy-" feat, where the blood of atonement was to be sprin-" kled, might reprefent the Aleim as parties in the act " for making a covenant, looking and relying on each " other for the performance, and regarding the blood, " which was the emblem of the confideration for " which man was to be redeemed; and this opinion " he will the more readily confent to when he recol-" lects that the ark which supported the mercy-seat " and the cherubim, the principal emblems of the " Tewish

" Jewish religion, is commonly called " tne ark of the covenant."

If it should be asked, what the faces of the other figures in the cherubim were supposed to be looking at while their confociates were viewing the person sprinkling the blood before and upon the mercy-feat? I would reply, that as the cherubim extended their wings from fide to fide of the holy of holies (see 2 Chron. iii. 11-13), fo those whose faces are represented as being outwards, may be supposed to have been "extending " their gracious, compassionate, benevolent attention " to the whole earth." It must be confessed, that the account given us by Moses of the publication of the gospel after the fall, is very short and concise; "The "feed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Yet it is highly probable, that the revelation made to Adam and Eve was in itself very full and explicit; for hopes of mercy are fo far recorded in that fingle fentence, as to have preserved them from despair and selfdestruction until the cherubim was exhibited and explained, which appears to have been immediately on the expulsion of our first parents from Paradise; when, doubtless, our most merciful and gracious Creator would, in the explanation of the cherubim, reveal all, or perhaps more than was afterwards made known to Moses, respecting the meaning thereof: for whoever duly confiders what has been faid above, unless he wilfully shuts the eyes of his intellectual faculties against truth, and what ought to be esteemed demonstrative testimony, he must, from what has been advanced, be constrained to acknowledge, that the cherubim led to a clear unequivocal idea, if not to a demonstration, that there are three persons in the Godhead; "whereof one became bound to join himself to humanity, perform complete righteousness, and give the fullest " fatisfaction for the fins of mankind; one became " bound to affift man thus redeemed, to believe in, " and lay hold upon this glorious redemption," and then to fanctify his whole foul and body after the image of his Creator, in righteousness and true holiness; and " one became bound to accept of that fatisfaction, and " upon receiving it, to admit man to fellowship and "favour;" and whoever is convinced of these precious truths will be led to confess, that even " before the " creation a covenant was made to this purport be-" tween the facred Three, in the event of man's fall-" ing;" and will with more pleasure acknowledge it when he reflects upon feveral passages of Scripture which have an immediate tendency to confirm the text; particularly Gen. vi. 18, ix. 9, where it is faid, " I " will establish my covenant;" which supposes a covenant to have pre-existed as a promise of mercy, &c. David says, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5, " He hath made for me " an everlasting covenant." Psal. lxxiii. 20, the prophet fays, "Have respect unto the covenant." Ezek. xvi. 60, last clause, "I will establish unto thee an "everlasting covenant." Zech. ix. 11, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth " thy prisoners out of the pit where is no water." Ifa. lv. 3, "I bave made for you an everlasting covenant, "the fure mercies of David." Heb. xiii. 20, "The " blood of the everlafting covenant."

After what has been faid, I think it needful only to observe, that "whatever religious act was done under "the Mosaic dispensation, was directed to be where "the Deity was to reside, to dwell, to appear in the midst of the people, in the place where he was to

" put his name; the place where, and where only, in "exclusion of all others, facrifice was to be offered, the altar was to be fet up, and every other ceremo- nial or emblematical act of their religion was to be performed;" and more particularly the highest already spoken of, the sprinkling of blood upon the mercy-seat before the cherubin; "therefore whatever was there done is said to have been done before Je- hovah; in the Hebrew, always before the faces of febovah:" now, if the several faces of the cherubin are taken to represent the persons in the Deity, and therefore to be called the faces of Jebovah, the reason of this phraseology will be obvious, as the phrase itself will be significant.

CHAP. IV.

Twelve irrefutable proofs given that Jesus Christ has the incommunicable name, Jehovah, ascribed to him by the inspired writers; and that he is the Lord the Saviour.

ADAM and Eve being thus fully inftructed in the meaning of the cherubim, and learning from thence, that in the fulness of time a person in Jehovah should (agreeable to the everlasting covenant, see 2 Sam. xxiii. 5; Isaiah xxiv. 5; Heb. xiii. 20, and agreeable to the name Aleim) become man, we may justly account for Eve's exclamation upon bringing forth her first-born, Cain, when she says, Gen. iv. 1, ארייוור, kaniti, I have gotten, aish or ish, a person, eth eth Jehovah, of the Essence existing *." Does not this text lead us naturally to conclude, that God preached to Adam and Eve before he expelled them from Paradise (or perhaps when he was pleased to explain the meaning of the cherubim to them), that Jehovah was to become incarnate? But Eve not knowing when, and having brought forth a man child, she would naturally utter the sentence under consideration, with that earnest eager joy by which a man expresses himself when he has with much pains and attention accomplished or obtained fomething that he most ear-nestly desired.—Instance.—When Themistocles the Athenian admiral deferted to the king of Persia, that king was fo exceedingly elated, that he would frequently cry out when he awaked from his fleep, Thank the gods! I have gotten Themistocles the "Athenian." So Eve, in a rapturous transport of joy,—Kanithi aish eth.—Jehovah! I have gotten a person of the Essence existing! And why this ecstasy? Because she had experienced a state of holiness, and had also felt the bitter evil and baneful consequences of sin. She therefore longed for that Deliverer who was to come from her feed, that fhould " bruife the fer-" pent's head, deftroy fin, and him that had the power " of fin, that is, the devil." And as fhe was first called " דשא, afhah, a woman;" fhe wanted to experience that her new name, " חוה, chavah, the ma-" nifester," should be fulfilled; * and that she might behold "God manifest in the flesh," I Tim. iii. 16, to take away her fins, to redeem her from all iniquity, and that she might be created anew " in righteousness " and true holiness, and be thereby enabled to live to " the praise of the glory of his grace."

* קניתי, first person sing. Indic. preter. in kal; from the root קנה, to get, posses, &c. איש, a noun, with a formative א, fignifying " a being, or thing subfishing or existing." It is sometimes translated " a man;" but in Numb. xix. 18; 1 Sam. xvi. 18; 2 Sam. iv. 9, it is rendered " person." האר, a particle, denoting " nearness, approach; also the very substance of a thing; "the; the very." -min. Perhaps fome perfons would translate those words, " I have gotten a man the Lord." But it should be remembered, the word is יהוה, Jehovah; not ארגי, Adoni; and therefore ought (in that case) to be read, I have gotten a man, the - Jehovah; not " from Jehovah;" as there is not any word or letter in that Hebrew text which fignifies, from. Befides, mm, Jehovah, is a compound word, as I have already shewn, p. 35. And the late learned John Hutchinson, Esq; says, that " יהוה, is com-" pounded of m, the effence, and the participle mm, existing by " fome virtue, power, or action, necessarily and voluntarily in it-" felf; fupporting or fultaining its existence personally, in manner, " in virtue, in power, in strength, in action, in wisdom, &c." Again, he fays, "The word no, expresses simply the essence; the " word min goes further; implies every person, power, and man-" ner which is in, or with the Essence, &c." See his Moses's Sine Principio, p. 22, 23. And as this learned gentleman's opinion is supported by others, enumerated p. 36, I have translated the pasfage, I have gotten a person of the Essence existing. Mr. Hutchinfon himself has rendered those words in his Introduction to Moses's Sine Principio, p. 202, " I have got a man, the very le-" hovah." Had the word been אדני, Adoni, instead of Jehovah, it might have been rendered, I have got a man, the Lord, the Ruler, the Governor, &c.; but as the word is הוה, Jehovah, I humbly conceive it should be read as I have translated it.

Having clearly and incontestably proved in the preceding pages, from the fullest evidence which ought to be required by any person (who is not determined to resist all evidence, and dispute against the clearest proof), that there are a plurality of persons in the [&]quot; Adam calls her name Eve (Hebrew nnn, chavah, " mani" fester)." See John i. 4; xi. 25; Col. ii. 3; iii. 4; and particularly 1 John i. 2, where in the expression, " the life was manifested," the apostle plainly alludes to the very name given to Eve, and the " reason of it." Parkburst.

Aleim, or Godhead; and that the cherubim feems to have been erected, partly to keep that great truth in remembrance, as well as to teach that the manhood was to be taken into the Godhead, in confequence of an antimundane covenant which the word Aleim leads to the idea of, as already shewn, p. 26 and 40.

I now come to prove that Jesus Christ has the names of God given him; and as Gen. iv. 1, is so full to the purpose, and is of so very early a date, I shall begin with that. Gen. iv. 1, "Then Adam knew Eve his wise," when she conceived, and bare Cain, and said," I have gotten a person of the Essence existing*. Proof first, that Jesus

* It strikes me, that while our first parents were in a state of innocence Adam had not any carnal knowledge of his wife; possibly had no inclination, or perhaps the short time of their continuing in that state (with the purity of their thoughts) might scarcely afford them an opportunity; for it is probable, that Adam had all the knowledge imparted to him of which he was fo eminently poffessed, prior to the woman's creation; and it appears by Gen. ii. 19, 20, that " Adam gave names to every living creature, to all " cattle, to the fowls of the air, and to every beaft of the field " (agreeable to their natures, which manifested his wisdom); but " as to Adam, there was not found an help-meet for him." Now if Adam had been in carnal connexion with his wife while in a state of innocence, she might have conceived then as well as she did afterwards. In that case, must not the child have been holy? But after they had finned, and the curse was denounced, fear might be fo powerful a restraint upon their inclinations as to prevent such commerce; but when the promife was clearly understood by the exhibition and explanation of the cherubim, they would be naturally led to indulge their inclinations, as by that means they loped for a speedy accomplishment of the promise, "Thy seed shall " bruife the ferpent's head." I have therefore translated the first 1, vau, in the verse as a connective particle, then; as in Gen. iii. 5; Ecclef iv. 7; and the 1 before nnn, when; as in 1 Sam. xii. 12; Prov. iii. 28; and as an additional reason to those already given, for translating the last clayle of the verse, " I have gotten a perfus Christ is Jehovah, or a person in the Essence existing.—In Exod. xxiii. 20, it is written, "Behold I "will send the angel before thee."—Ver. 21, "Be-"ware of him and obey his voice, provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions, because "my name is in him." Who was this angel? The proto-martyr Stephen, speaking of Christ, proving him to be the Messiah before the Sanhedrim, or great coun-

" fon of the Essence existing;" I find the Septuagint have rendered that clause, " Ἐκτησάμλος ανθρωπον δια τε θεε," I have gotten a man of God. Had the Hebrew been agreeable to their translation, it would have been איש האלהים, inftead of איש את־יהוה: and then Moses might as well have claimed the Messiahship as the bleffed Jefus Chrift; for he is called, Pfal. xc. in the title, האלהים aman of God; but bleffed be the Lord, the facred original is Aish, eth-lehovah; and must (to do it justice) be read as I have translated the clause, or as Mr. Hutchinson reads it. " I have got a man, the very Jehovah;" or, I have gotten a perfon of the Jehovah; therefore this is a proof that Jesus Christ is a divine person, or a person in the Godhead. Had there been a p. mem, prefixed to the particle nx, ath, then it might indisputably have been read, I have gotten a man from the Lord, or from Jehovah; but as the Old Testament, as well as the New, was so admirably indited by the Holy Spirit of infinite Wifdom, that there is not a letter superfluous nor a letter omitted; because " every " word stands for some material and sensible object, which God " created to represent and to give us ideas of some correspondent " and spiritual object." " Also, the Hebrew language, like a " striking picture, generally describes the passions by the esfects " they have on the body." Therefore, that letter n being wanting, prevents the clause being read as our translation has given it, and demands to be read as above translated; and it is as easy a clause to translate as any in the whole Hebrew Bible; because the words follow each other: and there are no difficult grammatical inflections or variations, so as to render it possible to mistranslate it, unless that be done wilfully, or from prejudice against the doctrine it holds forth. Montanus reads it, " Acquisivi virum cum Do-" mino," I have gotten a man with the Lord; and in the margin he reads it, " per Dominum," by or through the Lord.

cil of the Jews, fays, Acts vii. 38, "This is be that " was in the church in the wilderness, with the angel " which spake to him in Mount Sina *."-Ver. 35, "The angel which appeared to him in the bush," who is called, Exod. iii. 2, "The angel Jehovah;" who, in ver. 6, fays, " I am the Aleim of thy father, " the Aleim of Abraham, the Aleim of Isaac, and the "Aleim of Jacob. Then Mofes hid his face, for he " was afraid to look upon God." Stephen calls him, Acts vii. 31, " Down Kupsou, the voice of the Lord." The very fame word which the Septuagint substitute always for Jehovah. But it should be seriously remarked, that if that angel is not Jehovah he could not pardon, and therefore the expression would have been abfurd; but admit him to be Jehovah, as he most certainly was, and then both the charge and the reason for giving it appear just, requisite, and proper. Also, in chap. xxxiii. 14, Jehovah says (for he is the fpeaker), "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Therefore it was the angel Jehovah, or Christ, as appears by comparing the several texts quoted in this page. Here is a second proof that Christ is Jehovah. And in chap. xxxii. 31, " Moses " returned to Jehovah, confessed that the people had " finned a great fin;" then fays, ver. 32, "Yet now, " if thou wilt forgive their fin; but if not, blot me, I " pray thee, out of thy book which thou haft written." Ver. 33, Then Jehovah faid unto Mofes, " Whosoever " hath finned against me, him will I blot out of my " book." But I find, Rev. xxi. 27, calls it, " The " Lamb's book of life." Also, Rev. xiii. 8, calls it, " The book of life of the Lamb sain from the founda-

^{*} St. Paul fays, 1 Cor. x. 4, "That spiritual rock which (mar-"gin) attended them was Christ."

" tion of the world." Who was this Lamb? John the Baptist fays, pointing to Christ, John i. 29, " Behold the " Lamb of God." Alfo, ver. 36, " And looking upon " Jefus as he walked, he faith, Behold the Lamb of "God." And St. John calls him, Rev. v. 5, "The Lion " of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David." And in chap. xxii. 16, "I Jesus—am the Root and Offspring of David." Also this Lamb is represented (Rev. v. 6), " ftanding as a lamb that had been flain, having " feven horns (to denote his omnipotence), and feven " eyes" (to declare his omniscience); and to manifest his divinity, the hierarchies of heaven, the elders, the angels, and the spirits of the justified who were " made " perfect in glory," to the number of " ten thousand " times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands (but " no Socinians among this great multitude), fung," ver. 9, " a new fong of praise unto him;" and ver. 12, they fay " with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb "that was flain;" and ver. 13, "Bleffing, and honour, " and glory, and power, be unto him that fitteth upon " the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Now, Sir, these were not fallible men, but the whole army of heaven that ascribed the same glory to the Lamb as to him that fat upon the throne. Again, chap. vii. 9, 10. The innumerable multitude of the redeemed that were " clothed with white robes (to denote their " complete justification), and with palms in their hands" to shew their complete victory over Arius, Socinus, fin, death, the grave, and the powers of hell). Ver. 10. And they cried with a loud voice, faying, "Salvation " to our God who fitteth upon the throne, and to the " Lamb." Furthermore, the prophet, describing "the " holy Jerusalem" in chap. xxi. says, at ver. 22, " I " faw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty

" and the Lamb are the temple of it." Ver. 23, "And the city had no need of the fun, neither of the "moon to shine in it; for the glory of God did en"lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Here the Lamb is expressly said to be "the glory of God, " and the light of the holy city, the new Jerusalem." Also chap. xxii. 1, " And he shewed me a pure river " of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." Again, ver. 6, " The Lord God of the holy prophets fent his angel " to shew unto his fervants the things which must " shortly be done." But in ver. 16, " I Jesus have "fent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." Therefore "Jesus is the Lord God of " the holy prophets."

Put these Scriptures together, consider them well, Sir, and remember that God hath positively declared, Isaiah xlii. 8, " I am Jehovah, that is my name, and " my glory will I not give to another." Yet the apostle to the Hebrews, chap. xiii. 21, fays, "Through Je-" fus Chrift, to whom be glory for ever and ever. "Amen." And he repeats the declaration, to make it indisputably sure, Isaiah xlviii. 11, " I will not give " my glory unto another." Yet the same glory is given to the Lamb as to him that fat upon the throne. Here is a third irrefutable proof that Jesus Christ, the Lamb, is Jehovah.

Again, Isai. xlvi. 6, " Thus faith Jehovah the king " of Israel, and his Redeemer, Jehovah of hosts, I am " the first and I am the last, and besides me there is " no God." Again, chap. xlvii. 4, " As for our Re-" deemer, the Lord of Hosts is his name, the holy One " of Ifrael." Again, chap. xlviii. 12, " Hearken unto " me, O Jacob, and Ifrael my called; I am he, I am

"the first, I also am the last." But I find in Rev. i. 10, the prophet says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard a voice behind me as of a "great trumpet." Ver. 11, "Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." Ver. 12, "I turned to see the voice that spake to me, and being turned, I saw"—ver. 13, "the likeness of the Son of man." Ver. 17, "And when I saw him I sell at his feet as dead; and he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not, I am the first and the last." And chap. xvii. 13, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Proof sourth that Jesus Christ is Jehovah.

In Exod. xvii. 2, "Wherefore the people did chide

In Exod. xvii. 2, "Wherefore the people did chide "with Moses—who said unto them, Why do you chide with me? Wherefore do ye tempt Jehovah?" Ver. 7, "He called the name of the place Massah, i. e. temptation—because they tempted Jehovah." See Numb. xxi. 5, "And the people spake against God and against Moses; Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness?—there is no water." Ver. 6, "And Jehovah sent siery ferpents among the people, and they bit the people, and much people of Israel died." St. Paul, speaking of these infults, &c. 1 Cor. x. 9, says, "Neither let us tempt Christ as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents." A siste proof that Christ is Jehovah.

I now come to a passage which so fully and clearly proves the angel (spoken of Exod. xxiii. 20—22, as I have already shewn in the preceding page) to be Christ, I am naturally led to suppose, that not only Arians, but Socinians, must be consounded and put to silence, so as no longer to erust their horrid blasphemies against the Prince (or it may be read Author) of life," Acts iii. 15; and "Lord of glory," 1 Cor. ii. 8 *. The passage is in Joshua v. 13—15, "And it came to " pass when Joshua was by Jericho, that—behold " there flood a man over against him with his sword " drawn in his hand; then Joshua went unto him, and " faid unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adversa-" ries? Ver. 14, " And he faid, nay:" שר־צבא־יהוה כי אני, for I am Prince of the hoft Jehovah. " Then " Joshua fell on his face to the earth and" worshipped him: and " faid unto him, What faith my Lord " unto his fervant?" Ver. 15, Then spake the Prince of the host Jehovah unto Joshua, " Loose thy shoe " from off thy foot," because the place which thou didft ftand upon it (is) confecrated; " and Joshua did " fo." What can you (or the Jews) fay to this, Sir? For I hope neither you nor the Jews will fay, I have not given it a proper translation! If this man was not Jehovah, Joshua was guilty of shameful idolatry; such as Jehovah would not have excused in a prophet, which Joshua was beyond contradiction. For if he had been only a man, he could not have been the captain of the host; because Joshua was eminently so by God's appointment. Had he been only an angel that Jehovah had fent before Ifrael, or with them, and his created glory had led Joshua to suppose that he was one of the divine perfons of the Aleim, when Joshua prostrated himself to worship him, he would most assuredly have said to Jofhua as the angel that shewed John the great things he beheld, "When I had heard and feen, I fell down to " worship at the feet of the angel (compare Rev. xix. " 10), which shewed me these things. Then saith he " unto me, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow-" fervant, and of thy brethren the prophets-worship " God." Rev. xxii. 8, 9. From which we may fafely conclude, that the person whom Joshua worshipped was not an angel; he dared not to have taken the glory due to his divine Master alone: had he been only a man, Joshua would not have worshipped him; therefore he was the God-man, Christ Jesus, who frequently appeared in the human form, and that Joshua knew well; because he had ministered to Moses many years, had been his conftant attendant, was with him in the Mount forty days, and abode continually in the tabernacle as the fervant of Mofes, or his minister. Exod. xxxiii. 11. Befide, read his folemn declaration before the whole congregation of Ifrael, Joshua xxiv. After briefly enumerating the mercies that God had conferred upon them as a peculiar people, from Abraham's time to that day, he fays, ver. 15, " If it feem " evil unto you to ferve Jehovah, choose ye this day whom ye will ferve, whether the gods which your " fathers ferved that were on the other fide of the " flood, "flood, or the gods of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell; but as for me and my house we will serve Je-bovah." For all these reasons Joshua was the most unlikely man upon earth to worship any creature, even the most exalted of the heavenly host; therefore the man whom he worshipped was be to whom divine worship is justly due, the God-man Christ Jesus. Here is a sixth proof that Jesus Christ is Jehovah.

* I would here advertise the reader, that he may probably obferve some texts of Scripture quoted more than once, and may blame it as tautological prolixity; but I request him to consider, that I myself intend to raise objections, such as, I suppose, the Socinians would advance in argument; whereby I hope to show that each of those texts which I have repeated, is an answer to several of their objections. I shall also manifest, that Jesus Christ has all the divine names, viz. Aleim, Jehovah, and Adoni, given him; and in proving this, perhaps it may be requisite to quote the same texts, either to prove those points or to support other portions of Scripture that correspond therewith; because, as they (the Socinians) do not allow the plenary inspiration of the canonical books, it may be necessary to confirm the point by the testimony of various prophets or apostles; and in so doing it may possibly be requisite to repeat the same text more than once, especially as I have thought it needful to reply to several of Dr. Priestley's negations of the doctrines contained in the holy Scriptures.

In the Book of Judges, chap. xiii. we have another incontestable proof that the angel who was with the church of Ifrael at this time also, was the God-man, as may be clearly feen from the following verses, of which I have given a just translation. Ver. 3, " And the angel " Jehovah appeared unto the woman" (Manoah's wife.) Ver. 6, "Then the woman came and told her huf-" band, faying, a man of God (the Hebrew is האלהים " איש, a man, or rather a person of the Aleim) came " unto me,-but I asked him not whence he was," neither did he tell me his name. Ver. 7, "But he faid " unto me, Behold, thou shalt conceive and bear a fon " -the child shall be a Nazarite to God from the " womb to the day of his death." Ver. 8, " Then " Manoah entreated Jehovah, and faid, O my Lord, " let the" Man of the Aleim (or the Person of the Aleim) " whom thou didst fend, come again to us, &c." Ver. 9, " And the Aleim hearkened to the voice of " Manoah, and the angel of the Aleim came again, " &c." Ver. 15, " Then Manoah faid unto the angel " Jehovah, I pray thee let us detain thee until we shall " have made ready before thy faces a kid of the goats." Ver. 16, " If thou wilt offer a burnt-offering thou " must offer it unto Jehovah, for Manoah knew not " that he was" the angel Jehovah. Ver. 17, And Manoah faid unto the angel Jehovah, What is thy name?

name? that when thy words come to pass we may do thee honour. Ver. 18, And the angel Jehovah faid unto him, Why askest thou after my name, seeing it is exceeding wonderful *? Ver. 19, So Manoah took a kid with a meat-offering, and offered it upon a rock unto Jehevah, and he did wonderously; and Manoah and his wife looked on. Ver. 20, For it came to pass, when the flame went up from off the altar toward the heavens, that the angel Jehovah ascended in the flame of the altar; but Manoah with his wife looking on, then fell on their faces to the ground. Ver. 21, But the angel Jehovah did no more appear to Manoah or to his wife; then Manoah knew that he was the angel Jehovah. Ver. 22, And Manoah said unto his wife, Dying we shall die, because we have seen God (Hebrew, Aleim). See also Judg. vi. 11-24, which correspond to exactly with the passages in chap. xiii. quoted in this page, that to deny this angel being a person of the Aleim, and of the Essence-existing, is to confess an understanding so weak as not to comprehend the meaning of two circumstances that have the most perfect refemblance to each other; for ver. 23 politively afferts the person speaking to Gideon to be Jehovah, to whom Gideon built an altar, and called it "Jehovah-shalom," " Jehovah is reconciled." Compare attentively ver. 14, 16, 22, 23, and you must inevitably perceive that that angel was the Lord God. See also Numb. xxii. and compare ver. 9, 20, 35, and 18, 32, to shew that "the angel of the Lord" is Aleim, and Jehovah.

A due reflection upon the verses above quoted will naturally lead to a conclusion something similar to what follows. If this angel, as he is called (Hebrew, מלאד), was not the angel of the covenant, and a person in the Aleim, Manaoh and Gideon intended to worship a creature, and confequently to become idolaters; for they must have known that the blessings then and there promifed to them could only come from Jehovah. Observe, that in ver. 18 of chap. xiii. his name is exceeding wonderful; and in ver. 19, it is faid, Jehovah did wonderously; and in ver 20, that be ascended in the flame of the altar; and in confequence of that glorious but awful fight, Manoah and his wife fell on their faces to the ground; being then affured, ver. 21, that he was the angel Jehovah; and it appears from ver. 22, that Manoah expected a speedy death, because, fays he, "we have feen God." A proof that this was Jehovah Jesus " who was in the church in the wilder-" ness, &c." Acts vii. 38. But it should be remarked, that the word God in ver. 22, is in the Hebrew Aleim; and the woman fays in ver. 23, " If Jehovah was in-" clined to have flain us, be would not have received " a burnt-offering and a meat-offering at our hands, " neither would be have shewed us, nor would be at " this time have told us all these things." From whence it appears, by comparing ver. 22, and 23, that this angel was Jehovah Aleim; also that Manoah and his wife faw (what the apostle afferts 1 Cor. iv. 6) "The "glory of God in the person of Jesus Christ." And as Manoah said when he saw the glorious angel of the covenant, "We have feen the Aleim;" that is, "the " fulness of the Godhead;" fo the apostle Paul says, "In him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the God-" bead bodily," Colof. ii. 9. A feventh proof that Jefus Christ is Jehovah.

פלאי plural, implies more than wonderful; and perhaps might be justly rendered exceeding comprehension. The same word, only singular instead of plural, is rendered "wonderful." Isaiah ix. 6.

A very learned gentleman, whose writings are an honour honour to this nation, reads, 2 Sam. vii. 28, "And "now Adoni of the Essence-existing, thou thyself art of the Aleim, and thy words shall be established." If this be a true reading of the facred text (and I believe it would puzzle all the Arians and Socinians on earth to prove the contrary), here is another proof of the plurality of persons in the Godhead; and it seems as if Christ Jesus was that divine person whom the king-prophet is addressing under the names Adoni Jehovah.

In Pfalm xxiv. I find words expressive of great joy; fuch as might be fung on the triumphant return of some royal mighty conqueror, who had vanquished all his enemies by a complete victory over them.-Attend, Sir, to their rapturous language, and suppose that you hear their meiodious accents. Ver. 7, "Lift up your " heads, O ye gates! and be ye lift up, ye everlafting " doors! and the King of glory shall come in." Ver. 8, " Who is this King of glory? Jehovah strong and " mighty; Jehovah mighty in battle." And the celeftial armies feem impatient for his arrival, as if their blifs was not perfectly complete in his absence; for they repeat their strains of joy. Ver. 9, "Lift up your " heads, O ye gates, " and be highly elevated " ye " everlaiting doors, for * " the King of glory" cometh in.

[&]quot;I perfuade myself that the Hebraist will not censure me for the alteration I have made in ver. 9; because was, signifies "elevation, exaltation, rising, swelling, &c." as well as to "lift up;" and the polite English reader will perceive a difference that will rather please than offend. Also, I hope to be excused for having altered the verb in the last clause from the future to the present tense; because, if the King of glory was not upon the point of entering, there would not have been any necessity for the importunity which seems to be manifested for the immediate aperture of the celessial gates, the doors of eternal bliss. The word is "win, vailabo;"

in. But upon finding the heralds fo very importunate, it is again demanded, Ver. 10, "Who is this King " of glory?" The fame answer is repeated with an additional epithet. "The Lord of Hosts, he is the "King of glory. Selah." It is established. Take particular notice (as if the prophet had faid), all ye who deny that Christ is Jehovah.-For if a person in Jehovah had not descended to perform that great salvation (ascribed justly to Christ), why that elevation of the portals of heaven? why that expansion of the avenues and entrance to the celestial mansions of glory? Or upon what other occasion did a person in Jehovah ever defcend, to which this divine fong is fo properly applicable as to Christ on his ascension? And it is said, Pfalm xlvii. 5, " God is gone up with a fhout; Je-" hovah with the found of the trumpet." Therefore, as the armies of heaven celebrated the arrival of this glorious triumphant conqueror in fuch high ftrains of praife, when he " afcended up on high, and led cap-"tivity captive," and hail bim "the Lord of Hosts, " and the King of glory,"-fhouting aloud, " Sing " praifes to God, fing praifes; fing praifes to our "King, fing praises," Psal. xlvii. 6; furely these high encomiums were given as a just tribute of praise to bim who died for our "fins, and rofe again for our " justification;" " who having spoiled principalities " and powers, he made" public exhibition " of them, " triumphing over them" by himself; Colos. ii. 15. " And is fet at the right hand of God, far above all [&]quot; jabo;" first person suture, with vau conversive; but as the sense of the passage will not allow it by any means to be translated in the preter; and from what I have advanced above, it does not seem to be at any distant period, I have rendered it in the present tense, as best corresponding with the context.

" principality

"principality and power, and might and dominion; and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come;" Ephes. is 20, 21. And this agreeable to the strictest rules of equity; because "all thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers, and things in heaven, and things in earth, were created by him and for him;" Colos. is 16. And "be is the head of all principality and power;" Colos. ii. 10.—Also the idea I have given the above Scriptures is confirmed fully by the apostle, where he says, "Had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory;" I Cor. ii. 8. Here is the eighth proof that Jesus Christ is Jehovah.

eighth proof that Jesus Christ is Jehovah.

Again, Psal. lxxxix. 8, 9, "O Lord God of Hosts" (Heb. Jehovah Alehi tsabbaoth), who is like to " thee the strength of the Effence!"-Ver. 9, "Thou " rulest the raging of the sea; when the waves thereof " arise" thou wilt calm them. And in Isaiah li. 15, I am Jehovah thy God, stilling the sea and the rollings of its waves; Jehovah of Hofts is his name. Also in Jer. xxxi. 35, "Thus faith" Jehovah—who stoppeth the motion of the feas, and the roarings of their waves, the Lord of Hosts his name. Here are three Scriptures, wrote by different prophets, each one of whom afferts, that he who stilleth or stoppeth the motion of the sea is truly Jehovah. Now I find in the Gospel by St. Mark, iv. 37—39, as follows: "And there arose a "great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship so that it was now full; but he (Christ) was in " the after-part of the ship, asleep on a pillow, when " they awake him, and fay unto him, Master! carest " thou not that we perish? Then he arose, and re-" buked the wind, and faid unto the fea, Peace, be still; " and the wind ceased," and it became a prosound calm.

Matt. viii. 23—27; Luke viii. 23—25, contain the fubstance of this miracle. If we consider these passages merely as an authentic history only, the most determined against the divinity of Christ must here submit, and consess that he is undeniably Jehovah; of which this is the ninth proof.

Again, Pfalm xcvi. 5, "All the gods of the nations " are idols; but Jehovah made the heavens." Also in Nehem. ix. 6, "Thou, even thou, art Jehovah alone; " thou hast made" the heavens, the heaven of heavens, with all their host; the earth and all that is upon it; the feas and all that are in them; " and thou prefervest " them all:" also the host of the heavens prostrate themselves before thee. And Isaiah xliii. 24, "Thus " faith Jehovah thy Redeemer-I am Jehovah that " maketh all things, that stretcheth forth the heavens " alone, that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself." Now here are three positive affertions from the pens of the inspired writers, that "Jehovah made the hea-" vens;" and the prophet Amos fays, iv. 13, " He " that formeth the mount ins and createth the winds. " &c .- the Lord (Jehovah) God of Hofts is his name." But I find that the apostle John says, chap. i. 3, " All " things were made by him (Christ), and without him " was not any thing made that was made." Ver. 10. " He was in the world, and the world was made by " him, but the world knew him not." Also Colos. i. 16, "By him (Christ) were all things created that are " in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, " whether they be thrones, or dominions, or princi-" paiities, or powers, all were created by him and for " him." Ver. 17, " And he is before all, and by him " all" these " consist or subsist." I his is a tenth proof that Christ is Tehovah, and God of Hoths.

Again, Psalm cvi. 21, "They forgat God their Sa-" viour." Isaiah xliii. 3, " I am Jehovah thy God, " the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour." Ver. 11. "I, even I, am Jehovah; and beside me there " is no Saviour."—lx. 16. " Thou shalt know " that I Jehovah am thy Saviour and thy Re-" deemer."—Hosea xiii. 4, " I am Jehovah thy "God;-there is no Saviour beside me."-And the apostle Paul (in company with the apostle Barnabas, whose filence strengthens and confirms Paul's affertion) fays, Acts xiii. 23, "Of this man's (David's) feed " hath God, according to his promife, raifed unto If-" rael a Saviour, Jesus."-Titus ii. 13, "Looking for " the glorious appearance of the great God, even our " Saviour Jesus Christ *."—1 Tim. iii. 16, "God was " manifest in the sless."—" Is now made manifest by " the appearing of our Saviour Jefus Christ;" 2 Tim. i. 10. And the apostle Peter, 2 Epistle i. 1, fays, " The righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus " Chrift." Ver. 11, " The everlafting kingdom of " our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Chap. iii. 18, " Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord " and Saviour Jesus Christ; to bim be glory both now and for ever. Amen." "God will not give his " glory to another;" therefore if Christ be not a divine person in the glorious Godhead, the apostle was guilty of idolatry; but rather than allow this, I would fay, that the Socinians are guilty of blasphemy. These

^{*} To prove that the word I have rendered "even," is proper, compare I Tim. vi. 13—16; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8; I Pet. i. 7. But "when Titus iii. 4, is read as it runs literally in the original, the matter will be put out of all doubt. But when the kindness and philanthropy appeared of the Saviour our God.

produce the eleventh proof that Jehovah is Jesus Christ the Saviour, our God.

It is also written, Ifa. lx. 16, "Thou shalt know " that I Jehovah am thy Saviour and Redeemer; " the mighty one of Jacob." Here the Saviour and Redeemer is expressly called Jehovah. Is not your foul inflamed, Sir, with holy rapture, at the facred declaration? And are you not ready to cry out with holy fervent defire, Oh! let me know, even me, that thou Jehovah art my Saviour and my Redeemer, as well as "the mighty one of Jacob?" And, as a bleffed confequence, enable me "to rejoice greatly in (thee) " the Lord," cause " my soul to be joyful in thee my "God;" believing, affuredly, that thou hast "clothed " me with the garments of falvation, and hast covered " me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom " decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride " adorneth herfelf with her Jewels." See Ifa. lxi. 10.-For, "doubtlefs, thou art our Father, though Abra-" ham be ignorant of us, and Ifrael acknowledge us " not; thou, Jehovah, art our Father, our Redeemer; " thy name is from everlasting." Why the last clause, if the whole does not refer to Christ? For no one doubts that the Father "is from everlafting." See Ifa. lxiii. 16.

And, to prove that the divine person called by the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah Jehovah, is Christ, attend to what the apostle Paul says, 2 Cor. v. 21, For he (Christ), not having known sin, was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. I have written this as it is literally in the Greek; the common reading in our Bibles is impersect. In 2 Pet. i. 1, The apostle writes thus, "Simon Peter, a servant and an "apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained "like

" like precious faith with us" in the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ. Greek is, " if director" out to be named a saviour Jesus Christ. Greek is, " if director" out to be named a saviour Jesus Christ. The Lord of Hosts himself. " Ver. 14, And he shall be for a sanctuary, but for a softene of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel." St. Paul applies this to Christ, Rom. ix. 32, 33; and St. Peter in 1st Epistle, chap. ii. 8. Those prove Christ to be Jehovah of Hosts. Here is a twelsth proof that Jesus Christ is Jehovah. The 1 Cor. i. 30, is much to my purpose, in the Greek; and I might have quoted it here to support the others I have cited; but I reserve it for another occasion, when I will give it the proper literal translation.

CHAP. V.

Dr. Priestley's testimony in favour of the authenticity of the gospels, the book of Asts, and the epistles of the apostle Paul.—A cavil supposed, stated, and answered.—Seven irresistible proofs that Jesus Christ is God and Saviour.

IHAVING now manifested, by twelve irresutable proofs, that the holy Scriptures declare Jesus Christ to be Jehovah, I proceed to shew that they also positively declare him to be Aleim.

It is written, Exod. iii. 6, "I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face, for he was afraid to look upon God." I have already shewn that St. Stephen says, This God was Christ, in 7th

7th chap. of Acts: who, when be gives Moses his commission, to go unto the children of Israel in Egypt, Ver. 13, " Moses said unto God, Behold when I come " unto the children of Ifrael, and shall say unto them, "The God of your fathers hath fent me unto you, and they shall fay unto me, What is his name? What fall I fay unto them? Ver. 14, And God said unto " Moses, I am that I am." Please to remember, Sir, that you have publicly declared from the pulpit, that you "believe the Bible to be the word of God:" and you have declared from the press, " It is either a " mifunderstanding of the nature and object of true " revealed religion, or an inattention to the nature " of its evidence, that is the cause of the present unbe-" lief." Letters to William Tayleur, Esq. 1787. And in Letters, No. vii. and viii. to that gentleman, you (in the most forcible and expressive terms) give the fullest evidence that can be defired for the genuineness and authenticity of the gospels, the book of Acts, and the epiftles of St. Paul. Well then, Sir, God fays, Exod. iii. 14, " I am that I am;" and Christ says, John xviii. 5, 6, Εγω ειμι— οτι εγω ειμι. I am that I am. A divine power also accompanied his declaration; for, as foon as he had spoken those words, they that heard him " went backward, and fell to the " ground." But, as the bleffed Jefus spake in Hebrew to those people, it is highly probable that he made use of the very words that the Aleim made use of to Mofes, אהיה אשר אהיה, which had much the fame effect, even upon Moses; "he hid his face, for he was " afraid to look upon God." Alfo, I find in John viii. 24, " If ye believe not, οτι εγο ειμι, That I am, " ye shall die in your sins." The septuagint read the passage, Exod. iii. 14, Eyw up. 6 Hr. I am the Being. G 2 Bur

But in John viii. 58, Jesus says, "Before Abraham" was made (or created), I am. Also I find that, in the three following Scriptures, viz. Matt. xiv. 27; Mark vi. 50; John vi. 20; the Greek is "εγω ειμι," I am, though they are translated, "It is I." But, had this been the proper reading, I suppose the Greek would have been, εμαυτον εστι; or εστιν εμαυτον. Again, I find, Luke xxiv. 39, "Οτι άυτὸς εγω είμι;" which is not (what the common translation reads it) "That "it is I myself;" but, literally, That I am he. This is a nother of the divine appellations that Jehovah hath given to himself in Isa. li. 12, lii. 6, κιτικός. Here is one irrefutable proof that Jesus Christ is God.

If you should attempt to bring John x. 34, 35, as an answer to this proof of Christ's being a person in the Godhead, you will please to remember that I have given twelve proofs that he is Jehovah, and in that very chapter, ver. 30, Christ says (in the Greek), I and the FATHER, we are ONE. And in ver. 38, last clause, "The Father is in me and I in him."

Again, Pf. xlv. 6, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever "and ever." The apostle, writing to the Hebrews, says, chap. i. 1, "God, who at fundry times and in "divers manners spake of old unto the Fathers by the prophets, ver. 2, hath in these last days "spoken unto us in the Son." Of whom, he saith, ver. 6, "Let all the angels of God worship him." Why? because, ver. 8, "To the Son, he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." Here is a second proof that Christ is God. And whoever attends to the matter of the lxxii. Psalm, must (if not spiritually blind) confess that it is an address to Christ, under the character of wisdom; for, by a due attention to the 11th, 15th, and 17th verses, it will appear that they are not applicable to King Solomon, David's fon and fucceffor; therefore applicable to none but Jesus Christ.

Again, Pf. lxxviii. 35, "They remembered that God" was their rock, and the bigh God their Redeemer." Ver. 56, "Yet they tempted and provoked the most "high God." Pf. xviii. 31, "Who is God, fave the "Lord? Or who is a rock, fave our God?" Deut. xxxii. 15, "He forsook God who made him, and "lightly esteemed the rock of his falvation." The apostle Paul says, 1 Cor. x. 4, "They drank of that spi-"ritual rock that followed them (margin, more properly, "went with them), and that rock was Christ." Here is a third proof that Christ is God.

Again, Ifa. xlv. 15, "Verily thou God hidest thy-

" felf, O God of Ifrael the Saviour." Or perhaps it may be rendered, Verily thou art a ftrong hiding place, O God of Ifrael the Saviour. Luke i. 47, "My " fpirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." Acts xiii. 23, "God hath, according to his promife, raifed unto " Ifrael a Saviour Jesus." Phil. iii. 20, "The Saviour " the Lord Jefus Christ." I Tim. iv. 10, "We trust " in the living God, who is the Saviour." Titus i. 3, " According to the commandment of God our Saviour." ii. 10, "Adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all " things." iii. 4, "The kindness and love of God " our Saviour toward man appeared." 2 Pet. i. 11, " An entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly, " into the everlafting kingdom of our Lord and "Saviour Jefus Christ." Jude, ver. 25, "To the "only wife God our Saviour be glory and majesty, " dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen." Colof. iii. 3, "Your life is hid with Christ in God." G 3

Here is a fourth incontestable proof that Jesus Christ is God, from eleven testimonies.

Again, Ifa. xlv. 22, "Look unto me, and be ye " faved all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and " there is none else *." John v. 18, " The Jews " fought the more to kill him, not only because he had " broken the Sabbath," (How? By healing a man, who had been lame 38 years, by the word of his mouth?) " but faid also, that God was his Father, " making himself equal with God." And, xix. 7, "The " Jews answered him (Pilate) we have a law, and by " our law he ought to die, because he made himself " the Son of God." Where had Christ declared his equality with the Father? I answer, in many parts of the gospel by St. John. iii. 16, "God so loved the " world that he gave his only begotten Son, that " whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Ver. 17, "That the world "through him might be faved."—2dly, chap. v. 37,

* A very fenfible anonymous writer, in the Gentleman's Magazine for May 1752, endeavours to disprove (though his arguments do not appear to me conclusive in the least degree, and, which, I humbly suppose are clearly and fully confuted by p. 27, 28, of this Tract) that the noun with is plural; yet he fays of Pf. xlv. 6. 7, Thy throne, O Elohim, is for ever and ever; this (fays he) "is " indubitably meant of the fingle person of the Son, in distinction " from the Father," I would also remark, that the hymn which the angels fung at our Lord's nativity, recorded, Luke ii. 14, was in Hebrew; otherwise, we may suppose that those poor shepherds could not have understood them; and therefore they doubtless ascribed "glory to the Aleim in the highest;" and though I do not affert that this was an ascription of praise to the Son (Meffiah) only, yet I run no risk of being confuted in saying it was not addressed to the Father only, but to the holy, adorable, co-equal, and co-eternal divine Trinity, " The

"The Father hath borne witness of me." Where? Matt. iii. 17, Mark i. 9, Luke iii. 22, "This is my "voved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—3dly, John vi. 40, "That every one that feeth the Son, and " believeth on him, may have eternal life, and I will " rais him up at the last day." How? Because, ver. 57, "I live in (115) the Father;" and xiv. 10, "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doth the " works." Ver. 20, "Ye shall know that I am in " my Father." Chap. viii. 16, "I am not alone, " but I and the Father that fent me." Ver. 42, "I " proceeded forth and came from God." Ver. 58, " Jesus faid unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, " before Abraham was I am."-4thly, chap. x. 15, "As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father." Ver. 27, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." Ver. 28, " And I give unto them eternal life." How could he give them eternal life? Because, ver. 30, I and the Father, we are one. "Ego kai o Peter he esmen."— 5thly, ver. 38, "The Father is in me and I in him."
—6thly, chap. xii. 44, 45, "Jefus cried and faid, " he that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but " on him that fent me. And he that feeth me, feeth " bim that fent me."—7thly, chap. xiv. 1, Ye believe in God, therefore in me ye believe. See the Greek. Ver. 7, " If ye had known me ye should " have known my Father also, and from this present "time ye know him and have feen him." Ver. 8, " Philip faith unto him, Shew us the Father, and it " fufficeth us." Ver. 9, " Jesus saith unto him, " Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast "thou not known me, Philip? He that hath feen me hath feen the Father." Thus it is manifested that G 4. the

the Lord Jesus Christ declared himself to be in the Father and the Father in him; for which cause "the "Jews took up stones again to stone him." Chap. x. 31, Why? ver. 33, "For a good work we stone thee "not, but for blaspheming, and because thou being "a man makest thyself God." This is a fifth proof that Jesus Christ is God, except you can prove that St. John's gospel is a forged lie, which I believe is as impossible for you, and all of your opinion, as it is for you to walk upon the sea in a hurricane, carrying a first rate ship of war upon your shoulders.

Again, Ifa. xlv. 21, "I Jehovah, there is no God" else beside me, the just God and the Saviour, there is "none beside me." Here the declaration is doubled to shew the certainty of the affertion; and that there is not any God, or any Saviour, beside Jehovah. Yet I have given twelve proofs that Jesus Christ is Jehovah, sive proofs that he is God, and one proof (of which more might be added) that he is "Jehovah" of Hosts."

The evangelist Matthew, chap. xvii. 27, proves Christ to be Omniscient, which, you know, is one of the persections that belongs to none but Jehovah Aleim. He says to Peter, "Go thou to the sea, and "cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh "up; and when thou hast opened his mouth thou shalt find a stater (satinga)," the exact sum, a double didrachma, not a farthing under or over; "that take "and give unto them for me and thee." See Mark xiv. 13.

But as perhaps fome of those gentlemen, whose tenets I controvert, may be instructed to reply to me, you fail so uncommonly fast that your ship has outrun your dead-reckoning; and, having had dark cloudy weather for feveral days, fo as to prevent your celeftial observations, you are "lost in mazes intri"cate," and are in danger of running yourself upon

"Terra incognita;" for either you do not know, or else you strangely forget, that Christ is called "the "Son of Man," in many passages of the New Testament, and that he is also represented as praying to the Father, and says, John xiv. 28, "My Father is greater "than I."

A reverend and truly learned pious gentleman, whose writings are an honour to his cloth, and to the age and country in which he wrote, answers that objection as follows.—" I acknowledge the truth of this " remark, and affign this clear and obvious reason; "because it was the peculiar office of the second" named "person of the Trinity to humble himself, to " unite himself to slesh and blood, and to be made in " all things like unto us, fin only excepted. Had "not the bleffed Jefus been clothed with our nature, " and partook of our innocent infirmities, we should " never have heard any fuch account as his yielding obedience, or praying to another greater than himfelf. This refults not from his effential, but his " affumed nature; nor is it at all repugnant to reason, " to be inferior in one character, and at the same " time absolutely equal in another. His majesty, "King George, may be inferior to the emperor in the capacity of Elector of Hanover; he may be subject to the imperial authority, as he is a prince of the ". Germanic body; and yet equal to the most illus-" trious monarchs, obnoxious to no earthly juriffic-"tion, in his more exalted character of King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland. This feems to be " a very eafy and natural folution of the difficulty."

Should

Should it be faid, "the Head of Christ is God."—This is faying that "the Deity is the Head of the "Mediator."—"As the members are conducted by "the head, and subservient to the head; so Christ "Jesus, in his human capacity, acted in subordination to the Godhead; obeying the significations of his will, and referring all his administrations to his "glory. This exposition" (after the many irresutable proofs I have given of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ) ought to stop the mouths of gainsayers, especially as "the context corroborates, and the scope of "the apostle's arguing is consonant thereto." Hervey.

For my own part, I esteem it our glory that Christ was truly a man, as well as that he is "very God;" and therefore I will shew presently that this Lord God of Hosts became incarnate; or, as the apostle expresses it, raip expresses. John i. 14, He became flesh; and that having "all the fulness of the Godhead dwell-" ing in him bodily" (Colos. ii. 9), he accepted the voluntary homage, which was occasionally offered him as the divine Logos, the Messiah, in whom all the fulness delighted to dwell; as the original of Coloss. 19 expresses it.

Was I to bring all the proofs from the Scriptures, which those divine records would furnish me with, concerning Christ's divinity, I might quote many more in addition to those already produced; but, as I suppose that to be unnecessary, I will therefore proceed to shew that Jehovah became incarnate, of which the holy Scriptures will afford ample proof*.

CHAP.

^{*} The idea that God should become incarnate "was an ancient opinion among the Gentiles (who, no doubt, derived it from the real

CHAP. VI.

Gives many proofs that a divine perfon, who has the names Aleim, Jehovah, and Adoni, became incarnate, agreeable to the prophecies that were given of old concerning him. A note shows, from the testimony of two Pagan historians, that the Oracle at Delphos declared Christ to be "Lord" of the gods."—Irrefutably proved that Christ is worshipped by the angels in heaven, and by the primitive Christians on earth. Also incontrovertible proofs given that Christ's sufferings were prophesied of, and that even those manifest that he was a Person in Jehovah.—A Heathen supposes Christ to be the "God of nature," from the preternatural eclipse of the sun at the time of his crucisixion.

I have already shewn, page 27, that Adam and Eve expected that event (viz. Jehovah's incarnation), as did Moses, King David, &c. But Isaiah is very clear, and says, chap. vii. 14, "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Emmanuel." And, Jer. xxxi. 22, "A woman shall compass a man." Again, Isa. ix. 6, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a fon is given, and the government shall be upon bis shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, "Counselior, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, [&]quot; real appearances of Johovah under the Old Testament. See Gen. xviii. xxxii. 24; Jud. v. 12; xii. 6, 22), that their gods used to visit the earth under a laman form. And when the apostle Paul hoard the in the train and Lystra, the people lift

[&]quot; up their voices faying, The gow are come down to us in the [&]quot;likeness of men." Act. x.v. 11. Purk'ur.f.

"the Prince of Peace." The evangelist Matthew confirms the sulfilment of those prophecies, ch. i. 20, "The Angel of the Lord appeared unto Joseph in a dream, faying, Joseph, thou son of David, sear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost." Ver. 21, And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus" (a Saviour), "for he shall save his people from their sins." (Compare Luke i. 31, 35.)

But there is a most fignificant passage to prove that the Saviour is the Lord God in Hosea i. 7, middle clause; where it is positively declared, " I will save " them by the Lord their God." Hebrew, by Jehovah their Aleim.

"Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled "which was spoken by the prophet, saying, ver. 23, "Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, "which, being interpreted, is, God with us." Here are two prophets foretelling a fact which the evange-list Matthew declares came to pass several hundred years afterwards; and St. Luke, another evangelist, confirms it. Their evidence therefore must be confuted, or else they prove that Jesus Christ is "Emma-" nuel, God with us;" therefore this is a fixth proof that Christ is God*.

Again,

^{*} I have read, that "When Augustus Cæsar sent to the Pythia at Delphos, desiring to know who should succeed him as emperer, not having a son; the Oracle replied, "A Hebrew child, "Lord of the gods, has commanded us to return to hell, and you must not expect any further answers." And my author says, "that this is recorded by Dion Cassius and Suetonius," two Pagans.

Again, I have read, Pfal. cxxx. 7, "Let Ifrael hope " in Jehovah; for with Jehovah there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption. Ver. 8, And he " himfelf, והוא יפרה, shall redeem Ifrael from all his " iniquities." St. Matthew fays (as before fhewn), chap. i. 21, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he " shall fave his people from their fins." As our Lord's name, Jefus, fignifies a Saviour, it must also prove that he is Almighty; for none but God can fave any one from their fins, much less redeem them from all their iniquities. Therefore Jesus Christ is the Omnipotent Jehovah. Acts iv. 12, "Neither is there "falvation in any other." xxvi. 18, "That they " may receive forgiveness of fins—by faith that is in " me." Here is a thirteenth proof that Jesus Christ is Jehovah, and a feventh proof that he is God.

Again, Ifa. xlv. 23, "I have fworn by myfelf, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteoufnefs, and fhall not return, that unto me (Jehovah) every knee fhall bow, every tongue shall swear." Here is not only a folemn declaration from Jehovah, but also an oath, that to him "every knee should bow, and every tongue shall swear;" that is, I humbly suppose, to Jehovah alone all worship should be paid, all praise given, and that he, and he only, should be acknowledged as the God of power and mercy, saithfulness and benevolence, truth and righteousness. For, says he, Ezek. xxxix. 25, "Thus saith the Lord God,—"I will be jealous for my holy name." And, Isa.

Pagans. It is an indisputable fact, that, at the time of Christ's incarnation, the Gentiles universally expected the birth of a child, who was to be the Monarch of the world, as much as the Jews then expected the appearance of the Messiah; though, when he did really come, they rejected him.

xlii. 8, (as before quoted) "I am Jehovah, that is "my name, and my glory will I not give to another." Also, chap. xlviii. 11, "I will not give my glory to "another." But the apostle Paul says, "That at the "name of Jesus every knee should bow," both celestial, terestrial, and subterraneal; Phil. ii. 10. Now attend to what Jesus Christ says, John v. 23, "That " all men should honour the Son, even as they honour "the Father; he that honoureth not the Son, honour-eth not the Father." Also, chap. xii. 26, "If "eth not the Father." Also, chap. xii. 26, "It any man serve me, him will my Father honour." How can that be consistent? Because the apostle Paul says, 2 Cor. v. 19, "God was in Christ."—" Theos "in en Christo." Also, 1 John v. 20, (the original reads) "Jesus Christ; he is the true God and the life "eternal." And the apostle Thomas says to Jesus Christ, when he appeared to the eleven after his resurrection, "My Lord and my God." Recollect, Sir, what you have read in the preceding page, "Jehovah "hath sworn that to him every knee should how." "hath fworn that to him every knee should bow," &c.; and also that he "will not give his glory to another;" because, "he is jealous for his holy name." Yet, in fix places quoted above, he claims an equality with the Father; and fuffers one of his apostles to call him Lord and God after his refurrection. St. Paul and St. John both bear testimony to his divinity in their epistles, as shewn above. The author to the Hebrews declares that "all the angels of Ged" were commanded to "worship him" (Christ), and proclaims honour and glory to him, with the psalmist, by faying, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, a "fcepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom," &c. See Psal. xlv. 6, and compare Heb. i. 1—9.

Again, as the apostle Paul was converted by the Lord

Lord Jesus Christ in person, after his ascension to heaven, and to the glory which he had with the Father before the world was," John xvii. 5; and who (Paul) sinished his spiritual education in "the third heaven," 2 Cor. xii. 1—7; he surely would not presume to declare that Christ was equal with God, or recommend divine homage to be given to him (as Jehovah is so exceedingly jealous of his glory), except he was coequal with the Father and co-eternal. Yet he does declare the former and recommend the latter: for the declare the former and recommend the latter; for the apostle says, Phil. ii. 6, "He thought it not robbery" to be equal with God;" but you, Sir, have thought proper to render the words " οῦν άρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο " τὸ εῖναι ισα Θεῶ," " did not covet to be honoured "as God." I envy not your learning, nor your religious principles, if they lead to such delusions. See page 105, of this Tract, for a true reading of those words. And at the 10th verse, "That at the name words. And at the 10th verse, "That at the name "of Jesus every knee should bow, of those in heaven, "of those in earth, and under the earth; ver. 11, "And that every tongue should consess that Jesus "Christ is Lord (115) in the glory of God the Father. In Psal. xcvi. 13, The prophet says, "Jehovah commeth,—he cometh to judge the earth, he shall judge the world in righteousnets." And the apostle says, "God the judge of all;" Heb. xii. 23. Also the prophet Isaiah says, "Jehovah is our judge, chap. "xxxiii. 22. Jehovah is our king, he will save us." But the apostle Paul says, "We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ," Rom. xiv. 10; "We shall all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ," Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and "Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing;" 2 Tim. iv. 1. "Be-" hold

" hold the Lord cometh with, &c. to execute judg" ment upon all;" Jude 15. Therefore Christ is God and Lord. Here are such a multitude of proofs that Jesus Christ is Lord and God, that I will not weary my reader's attention with more, as I suppose it altogether needless.

But there is another name by which the great and glorious Lord God was known to his people of old, viz. אדני, Adoni. This I will prove is one of the names which is afcribed to the Lord Jesus Christ, and then, lastly, prove from a variety of Scriptures that Jehovah was incarnate.

And we have the most clear and determinate proof of this in Isa. vi. 1. "In the year that King Uzziah " died, I faw alfo (Hebrew, Adoni) the Lord fitting " upon the throne." Ver. 8, " Also I heard the " voice of the Lord (Hebrew, Adoni), faying, Whom " shall I fend, and who will go for us? Then I faid, " here am I, fend me." Ver. 9, " And he faid, " Go and tell this people; hear ye indeed, but under-" ftand not; and fee ye indeed, but perceive not." Ver. 10, " Make the heart of this people fat, and " make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they " fee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and under-" fland with their heart, and convert and be healed." St. John xii. 40, 41, expressly applies this to Christ, and favs, Ver. 41, "These things said Esaias when " he faw bis (Christ's) glory and spake of him." Sometimes he is called Adoni Jehovah; as in Gen. xv. 2; Josh. vii. 7; Judg. vi. 22; xvi. 28; 2Sam. vii. 18—20, 28. And fometimes Jehovah Adoni, as Psal. lxviii. 20; cxl. 7; cxli. 8. This is fo very full to the purpose, and so incontestable a proof, that Jesus Christ has the divine name Adoni, as to render any further further proof of it impertinent rather than necessary; especially as I have said so much upon this word p. 40.

I now come to prove that a person in this unutterably great and glorious Aleim Jehovah Adoni, in the fulness of time became incarnate, in consequence of a covenant made between the divine Persons " before "the foundation of the world *;" which incarnation was repeatedly foretold by the prophets, from Adam to Malachi +. And to confirm that, as clear an exhibition of the fact as was necessary, or as could well be represented, was given in the figures of the cherubim, as I have shewn p. 43—62. Beside the many texts referred to in the notes below, there is a remarkable one Pfal. cx. 4. " Jehovah hath fworn, and will not " repent; thou art a priest for ever after the order of "Melchifedek" (that is, king of Righteousness). And it feems that when this oath was made to Christ as God-man, Mediator, the conditions were, that he should "magnify the divine law, and make it honour-" able." Ifa. xlii. 21. Then Christ also swears, Pfal. exix. 106, " I have fworn and will perform, that I "will keep thy righteous judgments." And in Pfal. xviii. 21, he fays, "I have kept the ways of the Lord, "I have not been deficient in the presence of my "Aleh." Ver. 23, "I was also perfect before him."

[•] See Gen. vi. 18; ix. 9; Ezek. xvi. 60, 62; 2 Sam. xxiii. 5, (only instead of with read for, which the Hebrew requires.) Isa. xxiv. 5; Heb. xiii. 20. See also page 26, 33, and 35, of this Tract.

[†] See Gen. xxii. 16—18; Pfal. lxxxix. 3, 35. David fignifies the beloved (Christ.) Isa. vii. 14; ix. 6; Pfal. cxix. 106; cxxxii. 11; Jer. xxxi. 3; Mic. vii. 20.

See the Hebrew of these texts. xl. 8, "I delight to " do thy will, O my Aleh, yea thy law is within "my heart." Also Jehovah says by the prophet Zechariah, chap. vi. 13, Thou hast advised peace, thou shalt be between them both. (See the Hebrew of this clause.) Both! Of whom? Jehovah and man. Therefore " he took not on him the nature of angels; "but he took on him the feed of Abraham." And " he was made like unto his brethren, that he might "be a merciful and faithful high priest" of what refpects God; "to make reconciliation for the fins of "the people." See Heb. ii. 16, 17. And, as an argument to favour this, I further quote the author to the Hebrews, who fays, chap. iv. 14, "Seeing then "that we have a great high prieft, that is passed into "the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast "our profession." Chap. vi. 20, "Jesus, made an " high prieft for ever after the order of Melchizedek." These Scriptures prove, as well as several others which might be quoted, that Jehovah was speaking to Jesus Chrift, whom the Pfalmift calls Adoni; for, fays he, Pfal. x. 1, Jehovah faid unto Adoni, "Sit thou at my "right hand." Ver. 4, "Thou art a priest for ever, "after the order of Melchizedek." No one can read the Epistle to the Hebrews attentively without perceiving the force and energy with which the Apostle endeavours to impress upon his readers the meaning and fubstance of Psalm cx. and whereby he defires to prove that Jesus Christ is the great high Priest, the Adoni, the Melchizedek, king of Peace, spoken to in that Pfalm. Also Pfal. cxxxii. 11, so clearly demonstrates Jehovah's incarnation, that it needs no further introduction, nor any comment to illustrate or explain

ft. "The Lord (Heb. Jehovah) hath sworn in truth "unto David, he will not turn from it; of the fruit " of thy body will I fet upon thy throne." Compare Luke i. 31-33, Acts ii. 30; wherein St. Peter expressly declares, that the Jehovah spoken of by the Psalmist in said Psal. cxxxii. 11, was Christ. Fifteenth proof that Christ is Jehovah.-And, as the Jews look upon the names Adoni and Jehovah to be fynonymous as to the Being meant by each of those names (as may be fully proved by Pfal. lxxxvi. and xcvii. 5, and other texts), it is an incontestable proof that Jesus Christ is Adoni, the Lord of all things. Since I wrote what precedes I have met with Ezek. xiv. 11, in which chapter the prophet addresses Israel with very dreadful threatenings, prophets as well as people, to deter them from idolatry, &c.; and, that they may be affured of pardon for their past offences, he graciously promifes them that " they shall be his people, and "he will be their Aleim, faith Adoni Jehovah." Again, in chap. xxxvii. 26, "Moreover" I will cut off for them the reconciling Purifier; he shall be unto them an everlasting Purifier, " and I will place them, " and multiply them, and fet my fanctuary in the midst " of them for evermore." Ver. 27, And I will tabernacle with them (or I will be an inhabitant among them), "yea, I will be their Aleim, and they thall be " my people."

St. John i. 14, confirms the translation I have given. Ver. 27, where the Apostle says, "The Logos became "flesh (και εσκηνωσεν), and tabernacled among us, and we beheld his glory" (see Mat. iii. 17; xvii. 2—10; Mark ix. 2—8; Luke ix. 28—36; 2 Pet. i. 17), "the "glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of "grace and truth." (See p. 45.) These prove Christ to be Adoni Jehovah, Aleim. But I will also give fome proofs from the Scriptures which fully demonstrate that the manhood was taken into the Godhead, or that Jehovah became incarnate; for I glory in that "he was very man as well as truly God."

I have already shewn (p. 62-66) that Adam and Eve understood from that text, Gen. iii. 15, that " the "woman's feed" was to be a Person in Jehovah, asfurning the human nature; and both Jews and Chriftians, in general, have understood that the promises repeated and reiterated to Abram, and to Abraham, Gen. xii. 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 16, 18, "In thee shall all "the nations of the earth be blessed," was a promise of the Messiah, from his seed; and in the last of those Scriptures it is confirmed by an oath. Ver. 16, "By " myself have I sworn, saith Jehovah;" ver. 18, "In "thy feed shall all the nations of the earth be bleffed." The apostle Peter, Acts iii. 25, refers this to Christ: "Ye are the children—of the covenant which God " confirmed to our, &c.;" and the apostle Paul, Gal. iii. 8, does the same. Even the heathen, in very early times, expected a Saviour of a miraculous conception; and, to keep that in remembrance, they built a city and called it "Beth-haran," Num. xxxii. 36, that is, "the "temple of conception." (See Mr. Bate in loco.) Also the malice which the heathen ever manifested toward the Israelites was because of that tradition, and other reasons which they had for believing that the original promise given of a Saviour was then confined to Abraham's feed. See Pfal. lxxxiii. and compare Pfal. ii. and Pfal. cxxxvii. to prove this.

The children of Ifrael's dwelling in booths was to that people an annual memento that Jehovah was to become incarnate; and was kept at that feafon of the year in which he did actually appear in the flesh. The tabernacle made under the direction of Moses in the wiklerness, by the special command of Jehovah, typified the same as did the temple of Solomon. The shew-bread also typisied "Christ Jesus, the Bread of "Life;" and the Manna which was given the Israelites in the wilderness did the same: for Jesus saith, John vi. 35 and 48, "I am the Bread of Life." And, ver. 41, 50, "I am the living Bread which came down from beaven."

In Pfal. xl. 6, "Burnt-offering and fin-offering" (or rather facrifice and oblation) thou hast not delighted in. (See the Hebrew.) Ver. 7, "Then faid I, behold! I "come." That this means Christ is indubitable, when we consider ver. 15, (which may be read), They that fay unto me, Aha! Aha! shall be defolate, and their end fhame. See Pfal. lxx. 3, and compare Mark xv. 29. In Mat. iii. 11, 12, John the Baptist bears testimony to the incarnation and divinity of Christ. For he favs, ver. 11, "I indeed baptize you with water unto re-"pentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier "than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; he " shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Ver. 12, "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will tho-" roughly purge his floor, and gather the wheat into "the garner; but will burn up the chaff with un-" quenchable fire." These are the alone prerogatives of God which the Baptist ascribes to Christ.

In Ifa. ix. 6, there is a text that will puzzle the genii of all the Socinians to refute, and confound them at last. I have already quoted it to prove the Godhead of Christ; I now cite it to prove that God affumed human nature, and that "God and man be-" came one Christ." "Unto us a Son is born, unto

" us a child is given, and the government shall be upon " his shoulders; and his name shall be called Won-"derful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the Father of eternity, the Prince of Peace." I make no remark upon this text, because it is too clear to be misunder-stood; and so fully manifests God's incarnation, that to attempt any illustration would be a debasing of it, and an infult to the reader's understanding. Again, chap. xxv. 6, "In this mount (Zion) shall the Lord of "Hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a "feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of mar-"row, of wines on the lees well refined." Ver. 9, "And it shall be said in that day, Lo! this is our God; "we have earnestly waited for him, and he will save us." This is Jehovah; we have anxiously expected him, we will exult and rejoice in his salvation. These texts prove that the prophet foretold the incarnation of Aleim Jehovah; for he fays, they earneftly waited for God; and they anxiously expected Jehovah on mount (Zion) to give them the delicious feast promised ver. 6 (see the Hebrew), namely salvation from the dominion of fin here, and from the punishment due to fin hereafter. And if you expect this great falvation wholly, or in part, from any other fource, or in any other way than through faith in the incarnation of Jehovah Jesus, "fatisfying the Divine justice and mag"nifying the Divine law" in your stead, and on your account, you will most affuredly be deprived of the bleffing; and therefore I recommend to your perufal and ferious attention, the late Rev. Mr. James Hervey's Theron and Aspasio, with his Letters to the Rev. Mr. John Wesley; which author, though he be dead, by his writings, invites, woes, compassionately befeeches, and earneftly entreats you, even you, to confider, fider, that "there is none other way whereby finners "can possibly escape the punishment due to their transferences."

Having proved that Jehovah became incarnate, before I shew his sufferings and death, agreeable to the prophecies published several hundred years prior thereto, it may be requifite to take notice of his Herald or Harbinger's appearance in Judea, and his testimony concerning Christ, agreeable to what the prophets Ifaiah and Malachi had foretold. Ifai. xl. 3, "The "voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare "ye the way of Jehovah, make straight in the desert a highway for our God." And Malachi iii. 1, "Be-" hold I will fend my Messenger, and he shall prepare "the way before me, and the Lord, whom ye feek, " shall fuddenly come to bis temple, even the Messen-"ger * of the covenant whom ye delight in; behold, "he shall come, faith the Lord of Hosts." Whoever compares the first of these two Scriptures with Mat. iii. 3; Mark i. 3; Luke i. 16, 17; iii. 4; John i. 23, must be convinced that the passage refers to Christ, who by the prophet Isaiah is there expressly denominated Lord (Heb. Jehovah) and God. And the other (viz. Mal. iii. 1) refers to Christ's incarnation, by a substantive that I do not remember to have met with in any part of the Hebrew Bible, nor does my Concordance give it me. The word is, אדון, " from," ד, " to direct, " rule, judge," with a formative x aleph, and 1 vau inferted, denoting " a Ruler, Director, Lord;" and, being a fubstantive fingular, must denote a Person in Adoni affuming flesh; and, when compared with Mat.

and angel (Aleim), in very many texts of the Old Testament.

xi. 10; Mark i. 2; Luke i. 76; vii. 27, you must either give up your Bible, or confess that Christ Jesus is Lord and God.

To these John the Evangelist gives his testimony, chap. i. 14, "The Logos became slesh, and dwelt among us; and we beheld his glory." And the Apostle to the Hebrews says, chap. i. 3, "He is the brightness of the glory (of God), and the express "likeness of his Person."

Having proved that a Person in Jehovah became incarnate, I now proceed to flew that in his fufferings he is the Jehovah prophesied of in the Old Testament. As Jefus Chrift knew when the hour of his fufferings would come, and also that it was prophesied of him, Zech. ix. 9, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, "O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh "unto thee; he is just, and having falvation; lowly, " and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of " of an ass," that this was prophetic of Christ cannot possibly be denied, when we consult Mat. xxi. 5; John xii. 15. Therefore the prophecy was accomplished in him, as those two texts manifest. See also Isai. lxii. 10-12; Mark xi. 2-11. It is impossible duly to confider the liiid. chapter of Isaiah, and serioully attend to the fufferings of Christ Jesus, as related by the four Evangelists, and by 1 Pet. ii. 21-24, and not fee that he was the fufferer referred to. And also by comparing Zech. xi. 12, 13, with Mat. xxvi. 15, and xxvii. 3—10, it may be irrefutably proved that Jesus Christ is Jehovah. "If ye think good, "give me my price; and if not, forbear; fo they "weighed for my price thirty pieces of filver." Ver. 13, "And Jehovah faid unto me, Cast it unto the potter; " a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And "I took

"I took the thirty pieces of filver, and cast them to "the potter in the house of the Lord." Observe, it is Jehovah who says, "a goodly price that I was prized "at of them." But St. Matthew refers this to Christ in fo fimple, eafy, and natural a manner, as must prove, even to the Socinians, when they consider it properly, that he is the person whom the prophet calls " Jeho-"vah." And, as a further proof of this, Jehovah of Hosts calls a man his equal. Zech. xiii. 7. Who could this be? except Christ. "Awake, O sword, against" my Shepherd, and against" the excellent Man, my Consociate (or my Equal), "faith the Lord of Hosts; " finite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered." Perhaps it may be asked, by what authority I give the text this reading? I answer, that the word גבר, translated man, in its primary import fignifies prevalence, excellence, &c. and the particle על with which it is united by maccaph, is derived from a root that implies fuperiority. But this is not all; Christ himself fays, in the original of John x. 30, as before repeated, " I" and the Father we are one." And in chap. xiv. 9— 11, "He that hath feen me, hath feen the Father."-"The Father that dwelleth in me, he doth the works. "Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father in "me." And the apostle Paul says of Christ, Who having existed (υπαρκων, a participle, 2d aorist) in the form (or fashion, or similitude) of God, he esteemed it "no robbery (or usurpation) to be equal with God." See the Greek text of Philip. ii. 6. The fword did then awake against the God-man; " he was smitten and " the sheep were scattered:" also the manner in which he was finitten, and the depth of his affliction and fufferings are wonderfully delineated by the Psalmist in Pfal.

Pfal. xxii. and lxix. and by Ifaiah, chap. liii. fo fully and clearly, as not to admit of any miftake who was meant by those prophets. They are too prolix for me to copy; your Bible will declare the awful scene, of which the sun was ashamed *, the earth trembled, the rocks were rent, and the adamantine heart of the heathen "centurion, and those that were with him," were so convulsed that "they seared greatly," and were necessitated to consess, "Truly this was the Son of "God."

I have now gone through as much of the Old Teftament as my original defign led me to; namely, to prove that "Jefus Christ has the names of God given "him" in the holy Scriptures; and I have thereby shown, that what the prophets, under the Mosaic dispensation, foretold concerning Christ, the Apostles and Evangelists assure us was accomplished under the new dispensation, at the time, and in every respect agreeable to those predictions. I have also shown in several places, that the persections of Deity are ascribed to him, and that "the power of Jehovah was mani-" fested in him and exhibited by him."

Since I wrote what precedes, I have read that in your "History of the Doctrine of Atonement, "Vol. I. p. 212, "you have faid, that "He (mean- ing Christ) went through the scene of his trial with read attentively Psal. xxii. and lxix. with chap. liii. of Isaiah, and make such a bold affertion, as that, Christ was "without the least appearance of any thing like "agony of mind." Surely "the eyes of your understanding" are strangely obscured; so that the holy Scriptures are to you "as the words of a book that is

"sealed" (Isai. xxix. 11), in the fullest sense.

In Pfalm xxii, the prophet describes the sufferings of Christ, the taunts and insults he should meet with, the particular circumstances attending his crucifixion, even "to the dividing of his garments," as perfectly as if he had written that Psalm the day after the Lord Jesus was crucified; though you know that it was wrote a thousand years, at least, before the event. For he there complains, ver. 7, "All they that see me, "laugh me to scorn, they shoot out the lip, they shake "the head; saying," ver. 8, "He trusted on Jehovah "that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, see-

I cannot find "many things" either expressed or implied in Christ's saying, "My God, my God, why bast thou for saken me?" It clearly expresses the depth and weight of his affliction as a man, and a very pathetic lamentation of his Godhead (in a great measure) for saking him; that the anguish of his sufferings should manifest his exquisite pangs, dolour, and misery to be such as that "there never was forrow like unto Christ's forrow, in the day "wherein Jehovah afflicted him in his sierce anger." See Lamentations of Jeremiah, chap. i. 12.

"ing he delighted in him." Compare Mat. xxvii. 39, 43, where you will find the very words literally referred to Christ's sufferings. And ver. 14, "I am "poured out like water, and all my bones are out of "joint; my heart is like melted wax in the midst of "my bowels." Ver. 15, "My strength is dried up "like a potsherd, and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws." Ver. 16, "They pierced my hands and my feet." Ver. 17, "I may tell all my bones." Ver. 18, "They "part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my "vesture." Ver. 19, But thou, Jehovah, my strength, wilt not be far off *, making haste to succour me †. Ver. 20, Causing deliverance of my (west) breathing-frame from the sword ‡; "They of my united one ", from the power of the dog."

Also, by Psal. lxix. 17, His agony appears to have been so extreme, as to lead him to claim the conditions of the everlasting covenant §.—" Hide not thy "face from thy servant, for I am afflicted (or in anguish, or distressed) make haste (ענני) to answer

- * Heb. אל-תרחק, fecond perf. fut.
- + Heb. win, part. ben. from wx.

‡ I have rendered min, my breathing-frame (as the word fignifies), because the sword could not touch the soul.

און I have also rendered יחירתי, my united one; the margin of the Bible reads it "my only one." The root היה, signifies primarily to unite, make one, &c." Should it be asked, what the prophet meant by "my united one?" Undoubtedly the human nature of Christ united to the second named Person in the divine Trinity.

§ I do not consider ver. 19, 20 (of Psal. xxii.) as a prayer, when the facred original is duly attended to; but as claiming the promise in the antimundane covenant; called 2 Sam. xxiii. 5; Zech. ix. 11; Heb. xiii. 20; et al. "The everlasting covenant;" and "the blood of the everlasting covenant;" because it was to be ratisfied by blood. Therefore I have altered the common reading to what is nearer the Hebrew text, and more agreeable to its meaning.

prove his torments, his agony, to have been unutterable. Read, Sir, the pathetic, the distressful language of his afflicted soul. Ver. 20, "Reproach hath brokmen my heart, and I am full of heaviness; I looked for pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none." Ver. 21, "They gave me gall for my meat, and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." Compare this with Mat. xxvii. 34; Mark xv. 36; Luke xxiii. 36; John xix. 29, 30, and you may have the clearest evidence that those afflictions belonged to Christ, to him alone, and not to any other person. Isaiah also says, chap. lii. 14, "His visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men." Again, chap. liii. 3, "He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with griefs." Ver. 7, "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted."

Although a due attention to the Scriptures here quoted, would have convinced you of your dreadful error, in afferting what I have cited from your writings in the preceding page; yet you have gone further, and fay, in your "Hiftory of the Corruptions of Chriftianity," Vol. I. p. 158, "If the doctrine of atone-" ment be true, it cannot be pretended that David, or any other pious perfon in the Old Testament, was at all acquainted with it; and therefore the belief of it cannot be necessary to salvation, or indeed of much "consequence."

Awful declaration! Bold affertion! Dreadfully dangerous infinuation! How do you read the veries quoted above, from Pfal. xxii. and laix. and from the prophecy of Ifaiah? Were not the former penned by David, who must have known, as a prophet, that they could could not have reference to any other than the Meffiah? and we know for a certainty, that they were literally accomplished in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ; exactly at the time, and in the very manner that those and other prophecies declared they should be fulfilled; and, being confirmed by that "evangelical" prophet, Isaiah," your affertion must be invalid, and the doctrine you depreciate so unutterably, must be necessary to salvation, and therefore of the utmost consequence.

But, alas! what I have already quoted from your writings is not all; for you fay, p. 184, "Though the death of Christ is frequently mentioned, or alluded to by the ancient prophets, it is never spoken of as a fin-offering. For the propriety of our translation of Isai. liii. 10, may be doubted; or, if it be retained, it cannot be proved to exhibit any thing more than a figurative allusion." Nor even is this dreadful, unsupported, and insupportable consident affirmation all; for you affert, Vol. I. p. 155, "Is it not surprising, that in all the books of Scripture we no where find the principle on which the doctrine of the atonement is founded? Nay, the contrary sentiment occurs every where."

Before I reply to this four strand cord of Socinian delusions, or confute their foul-ruining principles, I will remark on what you say respecting ver. 10, of Isai. liii. and then invalidate your supposition by a literal translation of that verse.

First, your doubt respecting the common translation, tacitly implies that the original is authentic and divine. 2dly, Your saying, "It may be doubted," gives room to suppose, that you yourself cannot determine the point; because, if you have any knowledge of the Hebrew, you might eafily have fatisfied yourself and your readers in that particular; for its translation is not difficult; and, I humbly suppose, should be read thus. Yet it pleased Jehovah to crush him with piercings; feeing that thou wilt make his breathing-frame a fin-offering, he shall see the feed, he shall prolong the days, and the pleasure of Jehovah shall prosper in his hand *. Now it is of very little signification in this argument, whether that text be read as I have wrote it, or as the common translation reads it; for when taken in connection with ver. 4, 5, 6, and the last clause of ver. 8, 11, the idea of atonement is not only understood, but expressed. For to what end were immolations, sacrifices, oblations, except that they were considered as atoning, or rather as types of the great atonement?

I will now proceed to confute those four extremely dangerous affertions, as far as they respect the doctrine of atonement; because, in proving the truth of that comfortable doctrine, the other parts of those affertions fall to the ground.

Dr. Priestley says, "If the doctrine of atonement be true, it cannot be pretended that David, or any other pious person in the Old Testament, was at all acquainted with it; and therefore the belief of it cannot be necessary to salvation, or indeed of much consequence."

If facrifices were not vicarious, as types of the great atonement which Christ made, what are we to understand by Lev. i. 3, 4, particularly ver.4? which reads thus. "And he shall put his hand upon the head of the bear-offering, and it shall be accepted for him,

" to make atonement" (ינליו) instead of him (or rather on his account). Compare Lev. iv. 15—35, of which latter verse the last clause may be read (and in many other texts) thus " shall the priest make an "atonement for him *," and the fin which he hath finned shall be forgiven him. Also, Lev. xvii. 11, "The life of the flesh is in the blood, and I " have given it to you upon the altar, to make an "atonement for your fouls; for it is the blood that " maketh an atonement for the foul." But Exod. xii. and Levit. xvi. fo accurately prefigure the Lord Christ as our atonement, that they demand very particular attention; because the delineation is so very explicit as not to admit of a mistake, when taken in connexion with the other parts of the facred volume; for "among " all the facrifices instituted by Moses, none more cir-"cumstantially typified the blessed Jesus, or more ap-"positely expressed the benefits of his oblation, than "the paschal lamb, and the sin-offering on the day of " atonement."

"The paschal lamb was without blemish. Such was the Lamb of God; free from all taint of original in, and from every spot of actual transgression.—A lamb of the first year, in all the sprightliness and floridity of youth. Christ also laid down his life, not

• That the particle 1 vau, should be read thus, in this place, the context manifests. And 1 vau, is so translated Gen. vi. 22; xx. 16; Lev. xv. 31, et al. therefore I am justified in the alteration. But if that 1 vau, must be read "and," then it must be understood of Christ, "the great High-priest of our profession," and of him only; as no other priest ever considered himself, under the Mosaic dispensation, as capable of making an atonement in any other way than by the sacrifices which God had appointed, as types of the divine sacrifice, Christ Jesus.

when worn with age, or debilitated with sickness; but in the prime of his days. The lamb was to be slain " fo as to occasion the most copious effusion of his blood, " And was not this very exactly fulfilled in our fuffer-" ing Saviour? His blood flowed out in vast abundance " by the amazing fweat in the garden; by the rending " lashes of the scourge; by the lacerating points of the "thorns; by the dreadful nails which cleft his hands " and his feet; by the deadly spear which ripped open " his fide, and cut its way to his heart. Though the " blood was to be so liberally spilt, a bone of the lamb "was not to be broken. And you cannot but recol-" lect the wonderful interpolition of Providence to ac-" complish this emblematical prediction. When the " foldiers had received a command to break the legs " of the three crucified perfons; when they had actually " broken the legs of the two thieves which hung on " the right hand fide of our Lord, and on the left,

" The Lamb was to be killed before the whole af-" fembly. And did not the whole multitude of the " Jews conspire against Christ to put him to death? "Did they not all cry out, as with one voice, crucify him! crucify him! Was he not put to death at one " of their grand festivals, and in the fight of the whole " affembled nation?" Therefore the paschal lamb was an instructive type of him whose blood " should take " away the fin of the world." John i. 29.

But "the fin-offering feems to have been the most emi-" nent facrifice, and the most comprehensive; because it " shadowed forth not only the death of Christ, but also his " refurrection from death, and his afcention into heaven. "—As the various actions of some illustrious personage, "which cannot be exhibited by the painter in a fingle I

" draught, are displayed in several compartments; yet all " constitute one and the same grand historical picture; so " these glorious events, incapable of being represented "by any fingle animal, were typified by two kids of the goats; which, nevertheless, were reputed but as one offering. These goats were brought to the door of the tabernacle, and there presented before Jehovah.— " Christ also presented himself before the Lord when he " went up to Jerusalem, that all things written by the pro-" phets concerning him might be accomplished. Luke "phets concerning him might be accomplished. Luke xviii. 31. The goat, on which Jehovah's lot fell, was devoted to death. Christ also, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God (Acts ii. 23), was crucified and slain.—The body was burnt without the camp. And did not this point at the very place, and picture out the very nature, of our Lord's sufferings? For he suffered without the gate (Heb. xiii. 12); was there exposed to the rage of men, and the fierce wrath of God; under the most exquisite pains of body, and the utmost distress of soul. All significantly typisied by the slame of a devouring fire; than which nothing is more fierce, more penetrating, or more severely "more fierce, more penetrating, or more feverely tormenting."—" As the animal, which was flaughtered, shewed forth the Redeemer dying for our fins; that which escaped prefigured the same Saviour rising again for our justification.—The high priest put his "hands upon the head of the scape-goat, and with great solemnity confessed the sins of the whole con-"gregation. The import of this ceremony is expressly declared in the facred canon. Ver. 22, "The goat fhall bear upon him all their iniquities." And the prophet Isaiah says, "Jehovah hath caused to meet 44 upon him the iniquities of us all." And the Hebrew word word (גשא) is used in both places, which signifies to bear fin, as an offender, and vicarioufly," &c.

Did not that fervice express something like this, when the offender laid his hands upon the fin-offering? " Lord, I confess myself guilty. Punishment and death " are my due. But let them fall, I befeech thee, on " my victim; that thy justice being glorified, and thy

" law fatisfied, thy mercy may be honourably displayed

" in thy forgiveness of my transgressions."

Milton, upon this fubject of facrifices, and with reference to their principal defign, calls them,

> --- Religious rites Of facrifice; informing men, by types And shadows, of that destined seed to bruise The ferpent, by what means he shall achieve Mankind's deliverance *. Book xii. ver. 231.

Having shown that not only priests and Levites, but the whole congregation of Israel confidered facrifices as atoning, I come now to prove that both David the king, and other pious persons, mentioned in the Old Testament, did understand the doctrine of atonement.

Indeed it is scarcely possible that any man, who

^{*} The favage inhabitants of Madagafear use facrifices when they would supplicate the Deity in their distresses. Upon which Mr. Ives, in his Travels through Perfia, observes, that "he faw " many circumstances in the Madagascarian facrifice, so exactly " refembling those which are mentioned in the Old Testament as " offered up by the Jews, that he could not turn his thoughts back " to the original without being fenfibly struck at the exactness of " the copy." Ives's Voyage, p. 16. See Horæ Solitariæ. I 2

reads the holy Scriptures with proper attention, can avoid perceiving that the doctrine of atonement for fin was not only declared, but the great Antitype clearly prefigured, both in the paschal lamb, and by the goats on the great day of atonement, already spoken of; but, that this important doctrine should be kept in perpetual remembrance, you may see, by consulting Exod. xxix. 38—42, that there should be morning and evening sacrifices, or burnt-offerings; and at each a lamb of one year old was to be a part of the immolation, which was to be confumed by fire; and it is again repeated, Numb. xxviii. 1—8, with an additional injunction respecting the extraordinary offering on the Sabbath day, mentioned, ver. 9, 10. Also they were enjoined to make an increase of their offerings at the beginning of their months; at the paffover; on the day of the first-fruits; at the feast of trumpets; on the day of afflicting their souls; and on the eight days of the feast of tabernacles; for all which you may see a particular mandate in Numb. xxviii. xxix. and there you will find those called sin-offerings (as well as burntofferings) which were to make an atonement for the people; and if you confult Dan. ix. 20—27, you may, perhaps, fee that those oblations were really typical of the Messiah, or Christ.

I humbly hope I have fhewn, p. 62—65, that Adam and Eve believed in the atonement of Christ, and expected salvation from it; and that Abel, Seth, and all the antediluvian believers hoped for that blessing on the same principle, I cannot see any reason to doubt; and that Noah was possessed of "like "precious faith" appears clearly, when we duly consider Gen. viii. 20, 21. But so deprayed is human nature, in consequence of original sin, that in the course of 400 years, that is, from the deluge to the patriarch Abraham's time, there was so astonishing a proof of human depravity, that the whole race of mankind were gone aftray from the true worship of God, and were totally given to idolatry; so that, in order to prevent the continuation of this awful defection, Jehovah condescended to felest Abraham from all the families of the earth, and to promise that "in his "feed all the nations of the earth should be blessed." Gen. xviii. 18; xxii. 18. That Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, expected falvation from an atonement will not be controverted, I suppose, by any true Christian, when their history is duly attended to. But from the time of Joseph, to the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, there appears to have been another dreadful falling away, as may be seen by consulting the facred history of that time; until the prophet Moses is sent of God to inftruct them concerning his will, and the first object to which he leads the attention of the people of Israel (after he had given them the fullest proof of his divine mission, by the astonishing miracles that were wrought of Jehovah, agreeable to Moses' prediction) is, the paffover; of which I need not fay any thing here, as I have already been so copious thereon in the preceding pages; but you know that there was a man in the land of Uz named Job, whose history is allowed to have been "written by Mofes, while he " was among the Midianites, before Christ's circum-" cision 1520 years." This patriarch believed in that great atonement of Christ; for he represents the Aleim as faying, "Deliver him from going down to the "pit, I have found, כפר, an atonement," as the margin of our Bibles properly reads; and is the very same word used in Levit. xvi. 16, 30, &c. &c. And being perfuaded I 3 perfuaded of this invaluable truth, he also declares his faith in the Redeemer, and of his affurance of a refurrection, as you may fee chap. xix. 25-27. And as none of Job's three friends, Eliphaz, Bildad, or Zophar, attempt to contradict him, we may conclude that they were either confirmed in the same opinion before, or else were convinced of the doctrine from his afferting it; for they were very ready to contradict him in whatever differed from their own fentiments. though Elihu heard Job's faith in the atonement declared, and confesses, chap. xxxii. 8, "That the in-" fpiration of the Almighty giveth man understand-" ing," yet he does not contradict Job in those grand fundamental doctrines, though he reproves him feverely for his murmuring and felf-righteoufnefs, &c.

That the prophet Joshua was established in the same faith with Mofes cannot reasonably be doubted, when we confider that Joshua ministered unto Moses, was with him in the mount forty days, and was fo fully affured that the Angel of the covenant was Jehovah Jesus, that "he worshipped him, falling on his face " to the earth," in the deepest self-abasement. See Josh. v. 14. See also page 71. That Gideon and Manoah (in Judges vi. xiii.) believed the invaluable truth, I flatter myself is fully proved, page 73, 74. And if you confult I Sam. vii. 9, 10, I suppose you will admit that the prophet Samuel was a partaker of the fame "precious faith." That is, I mean, they all believed in, and were perfuaded of, the doctrine of atonement, or elfe why should Samuel, for instance, offer a burnt-offering, a lamb, but because that Israel had been repeatedly forely fmitten by the Philistines on account of their idolatry; therefore Samuel takes the appointed mean of reconciling them to the true Aleim, Aleim, by offering a lamb as a facrifice, the type of that Lamb "which taketh away the fin of the world." John i. 29. That Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, and Josiah, kings of Judah, firmly believed the doctrine of atonement cannot be well doubted, when their various histories are duly attended to, as recorded in the books of King3 and Chronicles. In 32d Psalm the royal prophet is describing ver. 1, the blessedness of those whose sins are (DD) covered (or have a covering). But in ver. 5, "I said I will confess my fins unto Jehovah; and "thou didst bear away (DNU) the iniquity of my sin." Selah. Also, Psal. lxxxv. 2, we have the very same word used in the same signification. How were all these fins and iniquities borne away? Isaiah tells us, chapter liii. ver. 6. And you may know who the bim there spoken of means by consulting Mark ix.

12; Rom. iv. 25; I Cor. xv. 3; I Pet. ii. 24.

When King David fays, Pfal. xl. 6, "Sacrifice and "offering thou didft not defire." (See Ifa. i. 10—15; lxvi. 3; why facrifices were no longer pleafing to Jehovah.)—Ver. 7, "Then faid I, Lo! I come; in the "volume of the book it is written concerning me."—Did David speak here of himself? I am persuaded you know better. Then who was to come and do that which facrifices and burnt-offerings (of beasts) were inadequate to? The apostle to the Hebrews, chap. x. informs us, and shows to be Christ; therefore, if King David had given us no other proof, in his writings, this ought to suffice. But David says, Psal. li. 7, "Purge me,—wash me, and I shall be clean." Here I would observe, that the Hebrew word translated, "Purge me," is "DITIM, 2d person sing. sut. and the root is NOTH, which signifies "To expiate, cleanse," or purify, by a sin-offering." And where a sin-offering is made, השא is the word that expresses it in Exodus, Leviticus, &c. therefore, it is manifest, that David looked forward to the great atonement, Christ, or the Messiah; for, in Psal. xxxii. he is assured of pardon for the iniquities of his fins; but he also knew, that though "the blood of bulls and of goats, &c. " might fanctify to the purifying of the flesh, yet he "knew that none but the blood of Christ could purge the conscience." Heb. ix. 13, 14. Who, by his own "blood-obtained eternal redemption for us." So that, as the pfalmist beautifully expresses it, "Mercy " and truth are met together, righteousness and " peace have embraced each other." Pfal. lxxxv. 10. And God can be faithful and just, even while he justifies the ungodly that believe in Jesus. Faithful, because he has promised; just, because his justice has been fully fatisfied, and his holy law unutterably magnified, by the complete obedience and death of our Emmanuel.

To this King Solomon fets his feal. I Kin. viii. 62, Then the king, and all Ifrael with him, offered facrifices before the faces of Jehovah. Ver. 63, Alfo Solomon offered the facrifice of peace-offerings which he flew before Jehovah. Here King Solomon himfelf does not prefume to enter into the prefence of the holy One of Ifrael without the blood of the facrifice; the type of the great Antitype; and who the prophet Micah calls, "The Ruler, in Ifrael, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting," Chap. v. 2. And, in ver. 4, the prophet fays, "And he shall stand and rule in the strength of Jehovah, in the majesty of the name Jehovah his "Alehi." Ver. 5, The Ruler, And this (man) shall be the peace, And as St. Paul beautifully expresses presses it, "Ye, who sometimes were far off, are "made nigh by the blood of Christ; for he is our "peace." Isaiah calls Christ "The Prince of "Peace."

Again, Zechariah fays, "The Branch (Chrift)—"he shall be the Counsellor (1927) of Peace." From all which, I think, we may fafely conclude that King Solomon had an eye to the Lord Christ, as his atonement, in those facrifices.

I should now bring the testimony of Isaiah, but no one that reads chap. lii. 13—15; liii. and consults the many explanatory Scriptures referred to in the margin, but must be convinced that Christ's most precious blood was poured out as an atonement for the iniquities, transgressions, and sins, of all who "believe to "the saving of their souls;" and that Christ Jesus is the glorious personage spoken of, as Jebovah, whose garments were not only "sprinkled and stained," but also dyed red "with blood;" so he was "their Sa-"viour." Or, "Thus he was to them for salvation." See Isa. lxiii. 1—8*. And the apostle says, "Being "justified by his (Christ's) blood, we shall be saved "from (This office) that "wrath through bim."

But there is a very remarkable expression in Isa. xxxii. 2, "A man shall be as an hiding-place from the "wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of "water in a dry place; as the shadow of a great rock "in a weary land" (rather a land of satigue, from its heat, &c.). And Jehovah will create upon every dwelling-

^{*} The fury, vengeance, and fury, mentioned in those verses I humbly conceive to be against sin, and the sinners who reject Christ's atonement and righteousness. But ver. 9 refers to true believers.

dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her affemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the splendor of fire slaming by night; but upon all that glory shall be a vail. Yet there shall be a pavilion, for a shadow in the day time, from the heat; and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from the storm and from the rain. (Ifa. iv. 5, 6.) Who is this glorious personage that shall be the glory, and yet the cloud-covering pavilion, &c. to Mount Zion and her affemblies? The prophet informs us, chap. xxv. 1, "O Jehovah, thou art my "God, I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name, be-" cause thou hast done wonderful things;" Ver. 4, " For thou hast been strength to the poor, strength to " the needy in his diftress, a refuge from the storm, a " fhadow from the heat." And the prophet, as you may fee, calls him, איש and יהוה, a man; yet Jehovah. Therefore all these Scriptures show that Jesus Christ is the refuge from the fury and vengeance threatened, Isa. lxiii. 1—8, which magnifest that be is the atonement.

But does Jeremiah bear no testimony to the truth of the doctrine of atonement? He says, chap. xvii. 5, "Thus saith Jehovah, cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh sless his arm, and whose heart departeth from Jehovah." Ver. 9, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." And chap. xxxi. 22, "Jehovah createth" a new thing in the earth. A "woman shall compass a man." For, "Behold the days come, saith Jehovah, that I "will raise unto David a righteous Branch."—Chap. xxiii. 5, 6, "In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, Jehovah our Righteousness." I therefore conclude, that as this prophet depended upon the righteousness of Christ Jehovah for his acceptance before the throne of the Aleim, and denounces an awful curse upon all that trust in themselves; he indisputedly looked also for atonement to "the blood of the covenant." (See Exod. xxiv. 8; Zech. ix. 11; Heb. x. 29; xiii. 20.)

Ezekiel also looked for a cleansing from Jehovah; for we find, chap. xxxvi. 25, Jehovah—Adoni Jehovah says (See ver. 23, to shew that he is the speaker), "I "will sprinkle upon you" purifying waters, and ye shall be purified; from all your pollutions, and from all your idols, will I purify you. How? Water, of itself, could not purify from the pollution of sin; it would be ridiculous to suppose it; therefore we are naturally led to conclude, that this purification is the same as the apostle to the Hebrews refers to where he says, chap. x. 10, "We are sanctified through the once offering "of the body of Jesus Christ."

We now come to the prophet Zechariah, who speaks so very plain to the point, that it will require a great deal of sophistry to make any man (however prejudiced) believe that the great atonement, made by Christ, is not there referred to. That prophet says, chap. ix. 11, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy" (תוביא, which signifies, purifier, purification, and) "purification-facrifice, "I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." Also, chap. xiii. 1, "In that day there shall be a fountain opened ^{*} min is used in this sense, that is, as a purification-sacrifice, (though not expressed in the Bible translation), Gen xv. 18; Exod. xxiv. 8; Jer. xxxiv. 18; and Psal. 1. 5. Compare Heb ix. 20; 1 Pet. i. 2. But "it is particularly applied to Christ as the "real purifier, and antitype, to all the sacrifical ones, Isa. xlii. 6; xlix. 8;" as well as in Zech. ix. 11.

"to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Je"rusalem, for sin" (actual transgression) and for uncleaness." (Perhaps legal, or involuntary impurities.) Is it possible to read this verse, and not perceive that an atonement is clearly meant; and that such an atonement as no blood could make but the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God."

Lastly, Nehemiah, who was the latest writer of any of the canonical books, except Malachi, bears his testimony also to the blessed important doctrine of atonement. Chap. x. 33.—" The sin-offerings to make an " atonement for Israel." Here is used, as well as in many other places, where atonement is mentioned.

Thus I have given the testimony of a great cloud of witnesses; even of inspired prophets, bearing witness to the certainty of the truth of the doctrine of atonement in the Old Testament, though you positively affert, that "it cannot be pretended that David, or any "other pious person in the Old Testament, was at all "'acquainted with it."

And I might also show that all the synod of the holy apostles," Ephes. iii. 5, understood the facrifices as typical of the precious facrifice of Christ, bearing our sins in his own body on the tree;" Pet. ii. 24. Agreeable to what St. Paul says, Heb. ix. 13, "If the blood of bulls and of goats sanctifieth to the purifying of the slesh;" Ver. 14, "How much more shall the blood of Christ purge your conscience.—Ver. 22, "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; for without shedding of blood is no remission."—Ver. 26, "Now, once in the end of the world, hath he (Christ) appeared to

" put away sin by the facrifice of bimfelf."—Ver. 28, "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." And, because Jehovah had no pleasure in the offerings or facrifices under the law; (see Pfal. xl. 6; Heb. x. 1—9.) then says Christ, ver. 9, "Lo I come to do "thy will" (O my Aleh), "O my God."—Ver. 10, "By the which will we are fanctissed through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ."—Ver. 19, "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into "the holiest by the blood of Jesus;—"Who, though he knew no sin, was made sin (or a sin-offering) for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in bim." 2 Cor. v. 21. The same apostle also declares, Rom. v. 8, "God commendeth his love to-"wards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for the ungodly."

The apostle Peter also bears his testimony further to this blessed truth. I Pet. i. 18, "Ye were not re"deemed with corruptible things;" ver. 19, "But "with the precious blood of Christ.—Chap. ii. 21,
"Christ also suffered for us."—Ver. 24, "Who, his
"own self, bare our sins in his own body on the tree;"
—"by whose stripes ye were healed."—Chap. iii.
18, "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just "for the unjust, that he might bring us to God."
Also St. John sets his seal to this invaluable truth.
I Epist. i. 7, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."—Rev. i. 5, "Unto him
"that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood."—Chap. vii. 14, "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their
"robes, and made them white, in the bleed of the
"Lamb."

Again, it appears from Acts x. 43, "To bim (Christ) give all the prophets witness, that, through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." "Neither is there salvation in any other." Acts iv. 12.

Should you fay, Oh! you make falvation very eafy indeed.—To make a profession of the faith in Christ, I confess, is not difficult; but to be a partaker of that faith which "purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9; and " bringeth falvation," is called, Ephef. ii. 8, " The " gift of God;" and Col. ii. 12, "The faith of the " operation of God." So that to whomsoever this faith is given, that perfon is "justified from all things," from which he could not be justified by the law of " Moses." Acts xiii. 39. Nor is this all, for they that are "justified are also fanctified," I Cor. vi. 11; and are "made meet to be partakers of the inheritance "of the faints in light." Col. i. 12. And being justified, and fanctified, they have the fullest assurance that they shall be "glorified." Rom. viii. 30. For being a "purchased" and "redeemed people, not with cor-" ruptible filver and gold, but with the precious " blood of Christ," they strive earnestly " to shew forth the praises of him who hath called them out of " darkness into his marvellous light." 1 Pet. i. 18, 19; ii. 9.

Thus, I humbly hope, I have incontestably proved that fin required an atonement by blood, and the death of the facrifice; and that, according to the types and prophecies above set forth, "Christ our passover was "facrificed for us." I Cor. v. 7. "Who died for our fins, according to the Scriptures." Chap. xv. 3. And that his death was a full and a proper atonement for the fins of all that truly believe in him."—"Whom

" God fore-ordained to be a propitiation." (See Rom. iii. 25, margin). So that it must be an incontestable fact, that "there remaineth no more facrifice for "fins*."

Permit me now, Sir, to call your ferious attention to what follows. Here is the evidence of at least fixteen prophets, and three highly favoured and peculiarly diffinguished apostles, whose testimony would overturn that of the finest genius; the most learned philosopher; yea, if he were even the greatest emperor that the world ever produced.—How pitiable then must your case be in the eyes of every serious Christian when they read your vague, insupportable, affertions, and consider the immutable declaration of the God of truth: "He "that despised Moses's law died without mercy, under "two or three witnesses! Of how much forer punish-"ment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy who "hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath

^{*} There are two remarkable Scriptures that lofe much of their important fignification by the common reading, viz. Jer. xxxiv. 18; of which the learned Mr. Parkhurst has given us the following transla-" The men who have not performed, דברו ברית, the terms " of the purification-facrifice, which, כרתו, they cut in pieces " before me, העבל, the calf which, כרתן בשנים, they cat in two. " Here, fays he, the calf is plainly called, הריח, the purifier, or " purification facrifice "-" So, Pfal. I. ברתי בריתי עלי זבח, who " have cut in pieces my purifier, or purification-victim in facri-" fice." See his Hebrew and English Lexicon, page 310, under כרת, where he shews that " The custom of, כרת בריח, cutting in " pieces a purification facrifice was used both by believers and heathen at their folemn leagues; at first, doubtless, with a view to the great facrifice who was to purge our fins in his own " blood," &c. And he brings in proof of it, Homer, Virgil, Dionyfius Halicarnassus, and Livy. And it is observable that " Homer's phrase is, of xia Tearer, to cut off, or in pieces, the oath-" offerings, which he expressly fays, Il. iii. lin. 245, 246 (comp. " lin. 269), were, Apre dew, two lambs." " counted "counted the blood of the covenant an unholy thing!" Heb. x. 28, 29.—" It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Ver. 31.—" When the Lord Jefus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jefus Christ."—The question here naturally occurs, What is that gospel we must experience eternal destruction for (see Mark xvi. 16), except we believe and obey it? The answer is very short. "If ye believe not (but in it is that I am," ye shall die in your sins." John viii. 24.

CHAP. VII.

Another very strange assertion of Dr. Priestley's stated, where he says, that "facrifices might be of men's in"vention," and that "they appear easily to fall under
"the general notion of gifts, or the more particular one
"of entertainments, and surnished at the expence of the "person who was dependent and obliged." Answered and resuted by the testimony and practice of the heathen, universally, as well as those of the Jews, and supported by the holy Scriptures.

But it feems as if you were determined to leave none of your ideas untried whereby your followers might be brought into the utmost depths of insidelity and absurdity; for, in Vol. I. p. 189, you suppose that "facrifices might be of men's invention," and that "they appear easily to fall under the general "notion "in notion of gifts, or the more particular one of entertainments, and furnished at the expence of the perfon who was dependent and obliged." Indeed, Sir, your ideas respecting the holy Scriptures are so very strange and unaccountable, that in general they excite pity for you; but here my risible faculties can scarcely be restrained from exerting themselves highly.—What!
"Sacrifices, gifts!" To whom? If you do not mean to Jehovah, to whom else could they be given? Read Psaim 1. 9—13, and you will see the absurdity of that supposition. And as to "facrifices being entertainments" of Jehovah, the idea is too ridiculous to merit a serious reply*. Were they intended as entertainments

* Will not every attentive reader be led to suppose, that a judicial blindness has been sent upon those gentlemen who manifest such very strong prejudice against the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and appear so exceedingly strenuous to propagate their unaccountable delusions? Surely in them the Apostle's awful declaration is literally suffilled, 2 Thes. ii. 11. But whether their notions or opinions deserve any, even the least attention (unless it be with a view to excite ridicule), the above affertion of Dr. Priestley's may solve the question; especially if taken in connection with what follows.

In reading the learned and Rev. Mr. Parkhurst's (M. A.) excellent treatise on "The Divinity and Pre-existence of our Lord" and Saviour Jesus Christ," p. 162, 163, I find a Mr. Gilbert Wakefield, A. B. vindicating Socinianism, who, perhaps, may have no objection to be esteemed a pillar in that herefy; and who seems to have racked his invention to find objections against the doctrine of the Holy Trinity (all which objections Mr. Parkhurst has replied to and consuted); but Mr. Wakefield, not appearing to be sully fatisfied with his own discoveries, has recourse to the unutterably stupid Targum (or paraphrase) of a poor, abandoned, pitiable, ignorant Jew; who represents the Almighty, in Gen. i. 26, and xi. 7, speaking "as if he were in consultation with a consistory of angels." And Mr. Wakefield says, "It is worthy of observativation, that the Targum of Jonathan Ben Uziel paraphrases the tainments of the facerdotal order in general, or only for those, who more immediately officiated at the altar and in the fanctuary? If for the first, the daily facrifices were unspeakably too scanty; if for the latter only, they were exuberant. But, not to multiply words unprofitably, the facrifices were, in the opinion of all true and well informed Christians (beyond all doubt) to shadow forth the sufferings of the divine Emmanuel, the Lord Jesus Christ; as, I flatter myself, I have already demonstrated. But I shall also quote the opinions (in the subsequent pages) of a sew learned gentlemen, where you will find the idea of facrifices being atoning and propitiatory, among the most learned and enlightened heathen nations, prior to our Lord's incar-

" former text as follows: And Jelovah faid to the angels who mi-" nister before him: - and the latter thus, Come, said Jehovah to "the feventy angels who stand before him. And this appears to " me a very fatisfactory explanation of the passages in question." Mr. Parkhurst then gives two other instances what an "admirable " Targumist" that same Jonathan Ben Uziel is, who paraphrases Gen. i. 16, as follows. " And Jehovah made two great lights, " and they were equal in glory one and twenty years, bating fix " hundred and feventy-two parts of an hour, and afterwards the " moon brought against the fun a false accusation, and was made "lefs." And on ver. 27, he fays, that "Jehovah created man " in his likeness, in the image of Jehovah created he him, with " two hundred and forty-eight members, and three hundred and " fixty-five nerves." " Now (fays Mr. Parkhurst) is not this a " most curious astronomer, calculator, and anatomist, and a most " fatisfactory expositor of Scripture?" Is it possible to demonstrate more forcibly the very awful delufion the Socinians are under, than that one of their pillars, supposed to be a man of learning, should have his intellectual faculties to darkened as, for the fake of endeavouring to maintain an unsupportable hypothens, he should give his countenance to fuch palpable abfurdities? Does it not appear that any stupid affertion is fatisfactory to a Socinian which attempts to overthrow the blefied doctrine of the holy divine Trinit;?

nation. Moreover, that Jehovah in Christ was the glorious person who was our atonement, our propitiatory sacrifice, the following passage ought to determine absolutely, and end the controversy.

In Zech. xii. 10, Jehovah fays, "I will pour upon "the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Je"rusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplications, and "they shall look upon me whom they have pierced."
Who is the speaker? Jehovah. Then Christ is Jehovah: because St. John xix. 37, expressly refers to this passage when speaking of Christ being pierced by the Roman soldiers with a spear.

Perhaps you may fay, O! this point is given up by Mr. Parkhurft, M. A. an unfpeakably better fcholar than you; and who admits, that אלי, in that verse, should be read אליו. I am forry that valuable gentleman has done fo; for though I pay the highest respect to his abilities, and bow with proper deference to his very superior attainments, in every sense of the word, yet I am not willing to give in up, without a strict examination and a critical discussion; because Mr. Parkhurst is a mere man, and I am persuaded that he does not defire to be confidered as a prophet, or &c. therefore he is fallible; and, either through an overfight, or perhaps fatigued with study, he may not have so fully confidered the two passages, viz. Zech. xii. 10, and St. John xix. 37, as he may hereafter. However that may be, I will not give it up for the following reasons. First, I find the word printed אלי, in the Hebrew text, as well in the Bibles that the Jews have, as in those of Christians. Second, I find the Greek of St. John xix. 37, is "Oforlas ei; on exertnoar," They shall look upon whom they have pierced. So that in this Greek text there is not any word either for me or him. And I cannot K 2

I cannot help concluding, that the varying of the expressions, "they shall look upon me;" and "they shall mourn for him;" is a beautiful metonymy *: the former pronoun referring to the divine, the latter to the human nature of the Lord Jesus Christ; for the prophet is foretelling how the Jews should be brought to repentance, and shewing the happy effect of the "Spi-" rit of grace, &c." being poured upon the ungodly. Namely, that they should look unto Jehovah-Jesus, as the me spoken of, the promised Messiah; and the latter shews the way, or mean whereby they should obtain pardon; that is, by looking unto bim, the man Christ Jesus, pierced, bleeding, and dying, as their atoning facrifice, agreeable to this prophecy and others; and as the great antitype of all their Mosaical sacrifices. Alfo, the Hebrew text reads, "They shall look upon "me" (Jehovah), therefore I prefer that to all mere men's opinions; and, notwithstanding Dr. Kennicott's " forty ancient manuscripts, which read that pronoun "אלץ," they might be fuch as fome Socinian zealot (probably under the protection of the apostate emperor Julian) might have forged; for it is well known that that fect abounded in Afia, Africa, and the South-easternmost parts of Europe, in the early ages of Christianity, and other zealots of the same persuasion might have eagerly copied it. Beside, the Septuagint read, " επιθλέψονται προς με," They shall look upon me with reverence; and " κι κόψονται έπ' αυτόν," They shall wail or lament for bim. I would therefore fet this in opposition to those manuscripts, as being at least as ancient an authority as those, and probably better attested. Likewise, as the preposition ελς governs the accusative in John xix. 37, I humbly suppose, that, if it should be read, "They shall look upon him," the preposition would have been ἐπλ, and the pronoun αυτον (επ' αυτον), and not "είς ὄν," agreeable to what the Septuagint have wrote the words, and as they are written or printed, Mat. xii. 18, John i. 32, &cc.

Since I wrote my own opinion on this head, I find that you not only doubt the truth of the doctrine of atonement, and deny that the principle on which it is founded is any where to be met with in the books of Scripture, but you likewise affert, that " atonement " for the fins of men by the death of Christ is another " cause of infidelity."

It is natural to suppose, that every man of learning knows, who has but a slight acquaintance with the heathen mythology, how "frongly and universally they "retained the tradition of an atonement, or expiation for sin; although they expected it from a wrong ob"ject and by wrong means."

But, lest it should be supposed that my opinion on the doctrine of atonement may be erroneous, I will beg the reader's patience while I advance the opinions of a few gentlemen, whose learning and abilities have very few equals; and who support this doctrine so effectually, as to make it of very little signification whether Dr. Priestley holds or rejects it.

"We find (fays Mr. Parkhurst, A. M.) a tradition of the doctrine of atonement, or expiation for fin, expressed in very clear terms among the Romans, even so late as the time of Horace." Ode II. lin. 29, Cui dabit partes scalus expiandi Jupiter?"

" And whom, to expiate the horrid guilt, will Jove appoint? The answer by the poet is,

" Apollo, the fecond person of the heathen trinity."

" And Herodotus informs us (Book ii. ch. 39), dif-" ferent animals (fays he) were facrificed in different " countries; but one common and general ceremony " was observed in all facrifices, viz. the laying of hands " upon the head of the victim, loading it at the same "time with imprecations, and praying the gods to di-" vert upon that victim all the calamities which might "threaten Egypt." Compare Levit. i. 1-4. Mr. Rollin also makes it appear, in his Ancient History, that "the whole world, from the earliest times, used " nearly the fame rites and religious institutions for " placating the Deity, averting wrath, procuring fa-" vour, returning thanks by facrifices, burnt-offerings, " and blood." " Means (fays the late Lord Prefident "Forbes) that in nature have no fort of connection " with the end proposed, and therefore could not pos-"fibly have had their origin from reason or natural " light; and as these observances, &c. prevailed among " mankind, without any fupport from, but rather con-" trary to, reason, it is a just conclusion, that the au-" thority for fuch a belief, and fuch observances, must " have been exceeding high and ftrong; and men can-" not think of any fufficient authority which could " have produced that universal faith short of divine "revelation." "Also, the doctrine for the remission " of fins, and expiation by blood, is, till the fecret be " explained by revelation, fo deftitute of any founda-"tion in reason, and apparently so contrary to it, that " no reasoner would have thought of it; or, if he had, so no one could have given credit to it without some " convincing

" convincing proof for the authority of that doctrine; therefore the universal reception of it is a demonstration in itself, that it had divine authority."

Here I might produce a great number of instances wherein facrifices were considered as atoning and making expiation: but that would lead me too far, and make this Tract too voluminous. "When Iphigenia "was slain at the altar, what was the import of that "memorable action?" Was it not intended "to apmease the indignation of the superior powers, and to obtain a propitious gale for the wind-bound fleet, and "consederate forces of Greece?"

" Sanguine placasti ventos, et virgine cæsa."

Seneca fays, alluding to the custom of facrifices, and the prevailing opinion concerning them, "Fuerim "tantum nunquam amplius dolituræ domus piamen-"tum."—"What we are to understand by piamentum, "the author himself explains in the preceding clause: "Quicquid matri dolendum suerit, in me transserit; "quicquid aviæ in me. To which his judicious commentator Lipsius, from an extensive knowledge of antiquity, adds, καθαρμα, sive piacularis victima." Sen. ad Helv.

The fame writer, in the fame confolatory epiftle, has another fentence still more to our purpose: "No-" bilitatur omnium carminibus, quæ se pro conjuge "vicariam dedit."—" Juvenal, relating this very sact, "expresses himself in very remarkable language; such as shews us, with the utmost clearness and precision, "what the ancients meant when they affirmed of a suffering or dying person, that he gave himself for ansother."

-----Spectat subeuntem sata mariti
Alceltim, et similis si permutatio detur. Sat. vi.

There is a passage in Livy which most of all deferves our notice, as it feems to imply a popular belief of the dignity, the more than human dignity, of the facrifice which was necessary to appeale the wrath of heaven. It relates to Decius devoting himself for the public good: "Conspectus ab utraque aciæ, aliquanto "augustior humano visu, sicuti cœlo missus, piaculum omnis deorum iræ." Lib. viii, cap. 9.

Now, if he who "took away sin by the facrifice of himself," "who was made sin for us (though he "knew no fin), that we might be made the righteouf"nefs of God in him," 2 Cor. v. 21, was only "a

"frail peccable man like ourselves," how came Horace by his idea quoted in the preceding page, and how came Seneca, Juvenal, and Livy, by the ideas I have quoted, except from a very ancient tradition among the nations?

You know, Sir, that expiatory facrifices were very common, not only among the Greeks and Romans, but also amongst the Carthaginians, "and the Mexicans had a similar custom." They all offered even human facrifices as expiatory; "who were loaded with " curses, affronts, and injuries, in their way to the al" tars at which they were to bleed. These wretched
" victims were called Καθαρματα, as their death was " efteemed an expiation: and when their ashes were "thrown into the fea, the very words, fignifying, Be " thou a propitiation, Γινε Περιψημα, Γινε Καθαρμα, were " used in the ceremony." Also, some of the idolaters, in more ancient times, called their idols "Baal Berith, i. e. " Baal the Purisier." From all this my readers, I hope, will be perfuaded that your doctrines are mere notions, not worthy of the leaft attention; as they are not countenanced, much less supported, by either the holy Scriptures or the practices of even any of the ancient nations, but flatly contradicted by the testimony of both, not only in theory, but also in practice. And I recommend to you the third Dialogue, in the late learned, pious, and Rev. Mr. James Hervey's Theron and Aspasio; where you cannot fail to receive suitable information on this most momentous subject. See also the Rev. Mr. Parkhurst's Gr. and Eng. Lex. p. 456, and his Heb. and Eng. Lex. p. 66, 253, 310, 345, 348.

After having fo fully proved that atonement for fin (agreeable to the economy of the covenant of grace) was indifpensably requisite, and that Jehovah has not appointed any other way of salvation (in his revealed word) whereby all his perfections can be glorified in the juftification of a finner; can you, as a finner, any longer refrain from proftrating yourfelf in the deepest felf-abasement? crying out, "Lord I have finned," and deserve nothing from thee but to be abhorred and forfaken by thee; - and, in this awful fituation, to whom shall I go? whither shall I betake me?-Oh, for ever bleffed be thy holy name, thou hast invited "all that are weary and heavy laden to come unto thee," in full affurance that "they shall find rest unto "their fouls!"—I am therefore encouraged to bow my knees at thy footftool, making mention of the name, of the atonement, and of the righteoufness of Jesus Christ only: for though I, alas! have finned, Jesus Christ, the righteous, hath suffered—though I have transgreffed, he hath obeyed; though I have broken the divine law, he hath fulfilled it, and magnified it, and made it unspeakably honourable; so that with thee, the Lord, there is righteous mercy, and with thee, O God, there is plenteous redemption; for thou canst be just, and yet "the justifier of the believer in Jesus."

CHAP. VIII.

Another Affertion of Dr. Priestley's stated, where he says, "The pardon of sin is in reality always dispensed by "the free mercy of God, on account of men's personal "virtue, a penitent upright heart, and a reformed "exemplary life, without regard to the sufferings or merit of any being whatever." Answered, and so clearly resuted, as that Dr. Priestley must be constrained to acknowledge his inability to repent, or in any degree to "ferve God acceptably, with reverence, and godly "fear," until regenerated by the Spirit of God.

I no fooner turn to another part of your writings, but the humble hope which I lately entertained, that you might be convinced of the necessity of slying to the great atonement for the pardon of your fins, is frustrated: for in Vol. I. p. 207, of your History of Corruptions of Christianity, you say, "The pardon of sin is in reality always dispensed by the free mercy of God, on account of men's personal virtue, a penitent upright heart, and a reformed exemplary life, without regard to the sufferings or merit of any being whatever."

Where do you read this, S'r? Not in the facred volumes of divine truth, I am certain; for they bear the most express testimony to the contrary every where, "and have concluded all under sin," Gal. iii. 22. Should you ask, "Wherefore then serveth the law?" Do you mean to destroy its holy precepts, and to annihilate its facred obligations? "God forbid!" I most earnestly desire to be obedient thereto in all things myfelf, and pray that it may be magnified and made unspeakably honourable; but neither I nor Dr. Priestley fhall ever be able to accomplish this valuable end by our own performances, because that "the law is holy "and spiritual, but I am carnal." "The commandment is holy, just, good, and exceeding broad;" therefore I have no ability to honour it; for "when I would "do good, evil is" too often "present with me." See Rom. vii. 12, 14, 19. The law, we are affured, was given "because of transgression, till the promised seed "fhould come." "It was a schoolmaster to bring us " unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith." Gal. iii. 24. "For Christ is the end of the law for "righteousness to every one that believeth." Rom. x. 4. But, as it appears to me, that you only admit the validity of the New Testament where you think it favours your own opinions, it would be needlefs to multiply quotations from that part of God's holy word, should men in general submit to your determination: but the major part cannot be perfuaded to hold fo dangerous an opinion; for, if they read your publications with attention, they will perceive that, when you want to bring Atheists or Deists into your notions, you recommend the Scriptures fomething like a Christian minister; but when you are desirous of establishing Socinianism, such precious invaluable portions as prove the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the personality of the Holy Ghost, are slighted; and then your unasked opinion is, that "the Scriptures are to be confidered "as faithful records of past transactions, &c." "No "Christian is answerable for more than this." Therefore it may be requifite to determine, first, what the true fignification of the word repentance is, on which you lay fo great a stress, and endeavour to put in the place of Christ;

Christ; and thereby render his precious atonement of no value, as you positively deny the doctrine. And, as I do not find any definition of this word (so frequently mentioned by very many, but so little attended to in its right important signification), in any part of your writings that I have seen (not even in your Catechism), I will endeavour to give its meaning as it stands in the word of God.

It is expressed by the inspired writers of the New Testament, by the word Metavoia; and signifies, 1st, "Change of mind;" 2d, "The returning to a "right understanding;" 3d, "To think on any thing "past with forrow." Johnson.—The first implies error, having been embraced through ignorance or folly, or both. The second implies, that the judgment is better informed, and, in consequence, the conduct is changed. And Dr. Johnson's idea implies contrition. So, "to give repentance," Acts v. 31, signifies "to "offer terms of peace and reconciliation."

The first impulse then which is indispensably necessary to repentance, is to be convinced of fin; for if we be not transgressors, we have not any thing to repent of. But it is incontestable, that "all have fined, and come short of the glory of God;" Rom. iii. 23. Therefore all stand in need of that "godly forrow which worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of.

Here it may be requisite to ask, Against whom have we transgressed? Against a finite creature, like ourselves? Then we might possibly, on some suture occasion, be capable of making an adequate recompence, beside manifesting a real concern for the offence we have given, or the transgression whereof we have been guilty; because man, being in a mutable state, the highly highly exalted among men may be abased; and the man of low degree may be highly elevated. But the trangressors under our present consideration have sin-ned against "Jehovah; the high and lofty One that "inhabiteth eternity, the Creator of the heavens and of "the earth," who is holiness in the abstract, and cannot look upon iniquity without the utmost abhorrence and detestation. And, as he is the same yesterday, today, and for ever, we cannot have any well founded idea of ever being able to make him the least recompence for any one of our fins, much less for the innumerable transgressions whereof the very best of us have been guilty: for the first revelation of his divine will is, "In the day that thou eatest thereof (i.e. that thou " tranfgreffeft), dying thou shalt die." מות. תמות. Gen. ii. 17. Dying temporally, thou shalt be subject to eternal death. Therefore it is as impossible to do any works meet for repentance, in our own ability merely, without the grace of God preventing us, as it is for any of us to remove a mountain by the bare word of our lips. And it is written, "Thus faith Jehovah, "Curfed be the man that trusteth in man," Jer. xvii. 5. And St. Paul says, "As many as are of the works of "the law are under the curse," Gal. iii. 10. "Think " not this contrary to the holiness of God, as though "he did not hate fin. No: but fuch dishonour the perfection of God's law by bringing down its purity and spirituality to a level with their imperfect works and shattered obedience. Pride and self-exalting is " at the bottom. And, as they appeal to the law, they "must be judged by the law; whose irreversible sen-"tence to all fuch is, Curfed is every one that conti-" nueth not in all things written in the book of the law "to do them;" Gal. iii. 10. And, whether you bea lieve lieve it or no, "in (you, or) me, dwelleth no good," Rom. viii. 17. Ask the great Apostle of the Gentiles concerning this, and he tells you, that "he delights in "the law of God after the inward man; but when I "would do good, evil is present with me;" Rom. vii. 21, 22. How then is he to glorify God? His answer is, "The life which I now live in the slesh, I live by "the faith of the Son of God." Let us endeavour to do likewise. See Gal. ii. 20, 21.

But, to prove this irrefutably, it may be neceffary to hear what the ancient Scriptures have left upon record concerning this matter; and which record will be found true when "the globe itself and all that it inherit shall "dissolve, and, like the baseless fabric of a vision, leave not a wreck behind." Or, to use the more emphatic and important language of the apostle Peter, When "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the carth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up." Then, Sir, even in that dread hour, shall the testimony I am about to produce be found unutterably glorious, because unalterably true.

First, What is the testimony of the infinitely wise and holy Jehovah on this head? "God saw that the "wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that "every imagination of his heart was only evil contimully," Gen. vi. 5. Should you say, admitting this to have been the true state of the case, that world was destroyed, and men are quite different to the antediluvians; then let us see what is Jehovah's account of them more than a thousand years after the deluge. "Jehovah looked down upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand to seek "God;" Psal. xiv. 2. Ver. 3, "They are all gone "afide.

" aside, they are altogether become filthy, none doeth "good, no not one." Pfal. v. 9, "For no faithful-"nefs is in their mouth, their inward part is very " wickedness; their throat is an open sepulchre, they "flatter with their tongue;" that is, "ufing deceit." See Rom. iii. 13. "They have sharpened their "tongues like a serpent, adder's poison is under their "lips;" Psal. cxl. 3. "His mouth is full of cursing, " and deceits, and fraud, under his tongue is mischief "and iniquity;" Pfal. x. 7. "Their feet run to evil, " and they make hafte to flied innocent blood; their "thoughts are thoughts of iniquity, wasting and de"ftruction are in their paths. The way of peace they "know not;" Ifai. lix. 7, 8. "There is no fear of "God before their eyes;" Pfal. 36. 1. Should you fay, "Surely these are poor" that are so foolish, for "they have not known the way of Jehovah, nor the "judgment of their Aleim; I will get me to the great men, and will speak unto them, for they have known "the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God;" Jer. v. 4, 5. Did the prophet find this supposition verified? Oh, no. See his answer. "These have alto-" gether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds." Last clause of ver. 5.

Isaiah i. 23, says also, "Thy princes are rebeliious," and companions of thieves." And the Pfaimist, lxii. 9, "Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie; to be laid in the ba"lance they are altogether lighter than vanity." Also the Lord by the prophet Micah says, "The godly man is perished out of the earth, and there is none upright among men. They do evil with both hands earnestly; the best of them is as a brier, the most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge;" Mic. vii. 2 —4. And ver. 5 and 6 shew, that man is so unutter-ably depraved, that he will break through ties of blood rather than he will be withheld from iniquity. And, as a confirmation of all the rest, the Lord, by the pen of Jeremiah, adds, chap. xviii. 9, "The heart is deceit-"ful above all things, and desperately wicked." And the Psalmist scems to have been terrified at considering the iniquity of mankind, and cries out (as distressed at the thought), "Have respect unto the covenant; "for the dark places of the earth are sull of the habi-"tations of cruelty;" Psal. lxxiv. 20. Such is the incontrovertible testimony of the all-wise God respecting man's state, and this is consistend by the experience of all the sanctified ones, the excellent of the earth in all generations. Behold the testimony that many of those have given.

In Gen. xviii. 27, we find Abraham, the father of the faithful, confessing his unworthiness to speak to Jehovah, even in devout intercession; ver. 27, "Behold "now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, "which am but dust and ashes;" and, in ver. 30, and 32, he seems to feel his great unworthiness of interceding with the God of holiness, and repeats, "Oh, "let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak! Also, we find Isaac and Rebecca in bitterness of Spirit (see the margin of chap. xxvi. 35), on account of their son Esau having married among the Hittites: which was so weighty a concern, that Rebecca cries out in the anguish of her soul, "I am weary of my life because "of the daughters of Heth." Why? Because of the iniquity wherein they abounded; so that she dreaded the consequence of her son's being united to such, fearing lest they should be drawn aside to idolatry, and lightly esteem "God their Saviour." In chap.

xxxii. 10, we find Jacob confessing his unworthiness, saying, "I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies, "and of all the truth which thou hast shewed unto thy "fervant." And it is enough to make even religious parents tremble for their children, when they read the horrid abominable iniquities wherein the sons of Jacob were found; arising, we may justly suppose, from the sinfulness of their nature, and their connections with their idolatrous neighbours; which manifest that neither precept nor example can avail without the special grace of God actuating our hearts, and guiding us by his blessed influence.

Job, who lived the nearest to those times (of any of the worthies we read of), experienced the unutterable depravity of the human heart from what he sound in himself, and observed of others. In chap. iv. 17, his friend, Eliphaz, had probably been pluming himhimself in the rags of his own righteousness, and attempting to justify himself before Jehovah; when, we are told, ver. 15, "A Spirit passed before his "face."—Ver. 16, "And he heard a voice, saying," Ver. 17, Shall mortal man be just before God? Shall a mighty man be pure before his Maker? (See the Hebrew of that text.) And Job himself says, chap. ix. 2, Who shall justify sallen man before God? Ver. 20, "If I justify myself, my own "mouth shall condemn me; if I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse." And in chap. xlii. 5, "I have heard of thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye feeth thee." Ver. 6, "Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

As the world grows older, and men more expe-

As the world grows older, and men more experienced, is there less cause for lamentation? By no means; the whole book of Judges, &c. shews the depravity of human nature, and what cause to lament its corruption, before God, for the space of sour hundred and fifty years. (See Acts xiii. 20.)

Again, hear David's confession, "Behold, I was "shapen in iniquity, and in fin did my mother conceive me." Pfal. li. 5. And in his latter days, when age and long experience had matured his judgment, he prays, "Enter not into judgment with thy "fervant, O Lord, for in thy fight shall no man living be justified;" Pfal. cxliii. 2. Also, to shew the sutility of being justified without the atonement and perfect obedience of the blessed Jesus, Solomon, the king, says, "Who can say, I have made myself clean, I am "pure from my sin?" Prov. xx. 9. And he adds, "There is not a just man upon earth that doeth good "and sinneth not." Eccles. vii. 20.

Again, Ifa. lxiv. 6, "We are all as an unclean "thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." To the same purport, see Jer. x. 24; Dan. ix. 5—11.

I have proved, that "all have finned and come short " of the glory of God;" Rom. iii. 23. And in all their best services there is so much acknowledged depravity cleaves to them, that it is sully manifested we must be "justified freely by grace, through the "redemption that is in Christ Jesus;" Rom. iii. 24: because we have no personal virtues to recommend us to God; for though many may be amiable in the fight of men, yet remember what the holy prophet Isaiah says, chap. lxiv. 6, above quoted; namely, "All " our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." Notwith-ftanding this solemn declaration, you say, "The par-" don of fin is always dispensed by the free mercy of "God on account of man's perfonal virtue, a penitent upright heart, and a reformed exemplary life," &c. But I have already fhown, that man is fo far from having an upright heart, that the God of infinite wisdom, "who fearcheth the heart and trieth the reins, has faid, that "The heart is deceitful above all things, and "desperately wicked;" Jer. xvii. 9. And the prophet Ezekiel, chap. xvi. having set before Israel their multiplied iniquities, promifes them mercy, but not for their personal virtue, or penitent heart, &c. but on account of the everlasting covenant, and for which, and that only, Adoni Jehovah would be pacified towards them, as you may fee, ver. 60-63. And in chap. xxxvi. 25—30, we have the manner described whereby sinners should be "turned from darkness to " light, and from the power of Satan unto God:" and in ver. 31, 32, the bleffed, the unspeakably bleffed, effect thereof; "Then shall ye remember your own "evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and "fhall loathe yourselves in your own fight for your "iniquities and for your abominations." Now, Sir, L 2 observe observe what follows, ver. 32, "Not for your sakes "do I this, saith the Lord God (Hebrew, Adoni Jehovah), be it known unto you; be ashamed and "confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel." How diametrically opposite this to your affertion quoted a little above; this cuts up pride by the roots, and destroys such vain boasting, and proves that all our salvation is of God, through Christ Jesus; "that "no slesh should glory in his presence," I Cor. i. 29. But your scheme supposes a power in man to turn to God, and perform every duty required of him perfectly. But I have shown already that this opinion is contrary to the declarations of God, and the experience of his Bible saints in all ages; and you shall plead guilty to the solemn charge; for, in spite of every subtersuge that you can slee to, those questions will constrain you to consess your impotence, or consound you; may God (of his infinite righteous mercy in Christ Jesus) cause it to humble you!

The last time that you administered (what is commonly understood by) the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to your congregation, was your whole soul engaged in the solemn duty? Had you no wandering thought of any kind? But was your heart and mind solely and invariably fixed and intent upon the important solemnity wherein you was engaged? I answer for you, that your mind was drawn off from what you was seeming to perform; your heart was wandering after other objects, and your soul was, for a few moments at least, attached to something relative to time and sense *; so that "Christ and him crucified; his "perfect

^{*} Possibly your darling topic might even then intrude, and a thought strike you how (in your opinion) you might overturn the

" persect obedience, even unto death;"--" his amaz-"ing great love, wherewith he hath loved us," did not wholly and invariably engage the "fpirit of your " mind;" Ephef, iv. 23. (Noos, "the mind, as in-" cluding the affections, the understanding, and the "will.") Where then was your merit in this highest and most solemn act of the Christian religion? Was there aught in you, at that time, for which God, the holy, pure God, could look down upon you with complacency? Or did you, even then, manifest any personal virtue inherent, or acquired, for which he could (confistent with the attribute of his justice) accept your person, or your services? Would he not rather reject both, with the utmost contempt, and fay, "Who hath required this" lip-fervice "at your " hands?" For it is written, "Curfed is every one " that continueth not in all things written in the book " of the law to do them." See Deut. xxvii. 26, and Gal. iii. 10. And, as your declaration shews that you suppose yourself to be a free agent, where were the unrestrained powers of your foul in those moments?-If you can prove the fullest and freest exercise of your mind by pure words, and manifest it by invariable, unremitting, holy actions (which you must allow is your bounden duty, and without the least deviation, even in thought), all of which are the indifputable privileges of free agents; then it necessarily follows that doctrine of Christ's divinity; and this at the very moment you was in the solemn act of commemorating his passion, his blood-shedding, and his death. But, if he was only "a mere man like "yourself," why honour him so highly, in so facred, so solemn, an institution? Especially if "he only came to set us" such "an example," as he persectly knew that we should never be able to come up to; would not this look like tantalizing us?

(if you had power to restrain such wanderings) you (if you had power to reftrain fuch wanderings) you was acting the hypocrite's part, and infulting the most high God wilfully. Is this your "personal virtue?" Does this manifest that you have such "a penitent, "upright, heart," as the holy, heart-searching, God will accept you for? On the contrary, does it not irrefutably prove that your heart is estranged to God, and far from righteousness? Your best services, and moral attainments, are no better than what Isaiah calls, ch. lxiv. 6, "filthy rags." Would not the confession in 2 Cor. iii. 5, have been infinitely more fuitable to your very imperfect state? It was the acknowledgment of one, who had every advantage to enable him to draw a right conclusion, where he says, "That we are not " fufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of our-" felves; but our fufficiency is of God." Also a learned pious doctor of divinity, whose sublime genius is greatly admired, and who was a cotemporary with us, made this one of his devout requests to God, Look down, great God, with pity's foftest eye upon a poor breathing particle in dust—my crimes forgive; forgive my virtues too—those lesser faults, half converts to the right.' Dr. Young's Night Thoughts. "Flee then, Sir, to the hope that is set before you," Heb. vi. 18, to Christ Jesus; for there is no salvation "in any other," Acts iv. 12; and "to him give all the prophets witness, that "through his name, whosoever believeth in him "shall receive remission of sins," Acts x. 43; who "gave himself a redemption-price instead of all" (υπερ πάντων), I Tim. ii. 6. Therefore, if you expect salvation in any other way, you are "resting the wel-" fare of your immortal soul, not on the soundation of " a rock, but on the point of a dagger. You are " haftening

"hastening to the decisive tribunal, stushed with the fullest hopes; yet loaded with a set of glittering sins; going, like poor deluded Uriah, not with any valid credentials," but with the sure testimonials of judgment to death eternal. For it is written (may you rightly consider it), "By the deeds of the law there shall no sless be justified in his sight;" Rom. iii. 20. —Why? Because the law is declared to be "the mi-" nistration of death and condemnation*;" 2 Cor. iii. 7, 9. Having

* I flatter myself that I have now fully and clearly proved the absurdity of supposing that you, or any other person, can possibly hope for " pardon of fin," " on account of" his, or your " personal virtue;" or, &c. (as stated, page 138.) And, as Iehovah himself has pointed out the way of reconciliation and acceptance with him, I will here copy it. " Ifrael shall be faved " in schovah with an everlafting falvation;" Ifa. xlv. 17. " Look " unto me, and be ye faved all the ends of the earth, for I am "God, and there is none else;-the just God and the Saviour. "there is none beside me." See ver. 21, 22 - Again, "Hearken " unto me, ye stout hearted, that are far from righteousness; I " bring near my righteousness;" Isa. xlvi. 12, 13. And in Zech. xii. 10, Jehovah fays, " I will pour upon the house of David. " and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and " of fupplications; and they shall look upon me whom they have " pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for an " only fon, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in " bitterness for a first-born."-From all which it appears that, when any foul defires falvation, he is to look unto Jehovah in Christ, "who was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for " our iniquities;" when, by looking unto him with faith, and depending upon the promise, he shall be enabled both to pray and to repent with that godly forrow which will lead him to hate fin, to love holiness, and to walk before God, as becomes those who profess godliness; and, every day, something like this will be the earnest breathings of his foul; Lord " pour upon me the Spirit of " grace and of supplications," that I may worship thee in spirit and in truth; enable me "to look upon thee," whom my fins have pierced, and give me grace to mourn, on account thereof, with L 4

Having replied to, and I humbly hope refuted, some of your favourite dangerous tenets, I come now to confider the New Testament for further proofs on the important heads of my title page. And, as you admit the authenticity of the history of that invaluable volume, I flatter myself that I shall be enabled to throw fome new light on feveral passages; which, inftead of being fubterfuges or expedients for Arians and Socinians to flee under (and by which they are held in worse than Egyptian darkness, more dreadfully bound than if fettered with the heaviest chains of iron, and more confined than if immured by walls of Adamant, elevated as the fummit of the lofty Alps), I will show that those very texts are as strong proofs of the divinity of that glorious Being whom you endeavour to degrade to a level with unholy, impure, finful, creatures, as any that has yet been adduced; for it is holy mourning, to forrow with godly contrition, and to be in bitterness, because of my transgressions, as one that is in deep distress for the lofs of an only child, even of a first-born; and, as I can find nothing in myfelf for which thou canst pardon or accept me (confistent with thy glorious perfections as revealed in thy word), oh! condescend to lead me to that " fountain opened for sin and for un-" cleanness;" for, though many despise and reject it, I desire to be washed therein, that I may be cleansed from all my defilements. and purified from all my uncleanness; for it is "the blood of " the everlafting covenant;" it is the precious blood of "the " Lamb of God which taketh away the fin of the world;" yea, it is the most precious "blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth us " from all fin." Oh! then, "let it now cleanse me, and, sprinkled " therewith, may my poor foul be presented before thy glorious " throne with kind acceptance; fer, this is all my falvation, I " plead nothing but this," that " Jesus died for my fins, and rose " again for my justification;" and that he hath been made unto me "the wisdom of God, and also rightcousness, sanctification, and " redemption." Let my glorying therefore be in him, and in him only, " whom to know is life eternal." demonstrable, demonstrable, that Jesus Christ is the sum and substance of the holy Scriptures, as well in the writings of the prophets, as in the Mosaical economy and the New Testament. For do we ask, Who is the Creator of the heavens and of the earth, with all this glorious system of nature, that we behold? St. John says, chap. i. 3, "All things were made by him (Christ), and "without him was not any thing made that was "without him was not any thing made that was "made" (or created). St. Paul fays, Colof. i. 16,

"By him (Chrift) were all things created, that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible,
"whether (they be) thrones or dominions, or principatities or powers, all these ($\tau \alpha \pi \alpha \nu \tau \alpha$) were created by him, and for him."—And as the Creator, he is worshipped in heaven; for the angelic host "cast their "crowns before his throne, saying, Thou art worthy, "O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power, so for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure "they are and were created;" Rev. iv. 11. And the prophet Isaiah says, chap. xl. 28, "Hast thou not known? Hast thou not heard, that the everlasting "God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?"—Also the prophet Amos iv. 13, "Lo! he that formeth the mountains, " and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what " is his thought" (fee Matt. ix. 4; Luke xi. 17), "Jehovah, the God of Hofts, is his name." Here are the testimonies of two apostles, of two prophets, and two evangelists, which, when compared, incontestably prove that Jesus Christ is "the Lord "God of Hosts."—Do we admire the order, the harmony, the unutterable beauty, of the universe? And are we astonished how they are upheld and continued in that regular disposition? "He (Christ) is be-" fore

"fore all things, and by him all things consist;" Col. i. 17. "He upholdeth all things by the word of his "power;" Heb. i. 13. "In him are hidden all the "treasures of wisdom and knowledge;" Colos. ii. 3. So that, if we believe in him and rely upon him, be is to us "the wisdom of God, and also righteousness and fanctification, and redemption;" I Cor. i. 30. See also Psal. cii. 24—27; and compare Heb. i. 10—12.

CHAP. IX.

Gives the proper fignification of the Greek nouns @cos and Kupios. Shews the confession of faith, for Jews and Gentiles, requisite for admission into the communion of the faithful, in the days of primitive Christianity. Corrects several oversights in the common translation of the Bible. Also further incontestable proofs of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and points out the manner of a sinner's justification before God.—An assertion of Julian, the apostate, stated. Supported by Dr. Priestley; but shown to be an inexcusable error. The dreadful end of that apostate Emperor (Julian), and the awful consequence of his kaving attempted to rebuild the city of Jerusalem, and a third temple.

Now, before I can proceed with propriety, there are certain words in the New Testament that require to be duly understood, and a just definition given of them; and those are Θεος and Κυριος, translated God and Lord.

But what does Oeos express, or imply? And from whence whence is it derived? I cannot find that it has any derivation, any more than Deus; nor could I find, until lately, that either of those words have any import or fignification, except that each of them is translated, "God;" which is derived from a Saxon word, fignifying "good;" but neither Osos (Theos), nor Deus (upon a transient view of the words), implies so much; and it is only from the declarative, and manifested perfections of Jehovah, in his word and providence, from whence we are enabled to understand that he is worthy of being entitled good; not fo from the word God.-However the learned and ingenious Mr. Parkhurst, M. A. fays, that "Various are the derivations pro"posed of this word (Θ_{EOS}). "The most proba"ble seems to be that which deduces it from the " verb, Θεω, to place; and adds that, "Phornutus, " the stoic, in the reign of Nero, wrote a philosophi-" cal explanation of the heathen worship and ceremo-" nies; in which he plainly refers them all to the dif-" ferent parts of material nature; as, for instance, to "the heavens, air, ether, fun, moon, ftars, &c .-" This philosopher, in his chapter περι κρανκ (concern-" ing heaven), fays, it is probable that Oco, the Gods, " were fo called from $\mathfrak{I}_{\mathfrak{E}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}}$, position, or placing;—

" these, then, are Gods ($\mathfrak{O}_{\mathfrak{E}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}}$) which are the disposers
" ($\mathfrak{I}_{\mathfrak{E}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}}$) and formers of all things." " In this view " the word OFOS, or OFOS (for the ancient Greeks used " it both in the fingular and plural to express their " god, the heavens) will have much the same radical " meaning as the Heb. my, the heavens (derived " in like manner from Dy to place"); which, "as a " participial noun, masc. plur." fignifies, "literally, " the disposers, placers (in which sense the word is " plainly used, Isa. v. 20; Mal. ii. 2). This is a " descriptive

"descriptive name of the heavens, or of that immense celestial stuid, subsisting in the three conditions of fire, light, and spirit, or gross air, which fills every part of the universe, not possessed by other matter," Nor was that species of idolatry confined to the Greeks, Romans, and Asiatics only, or even to the old world. The inhabitants of the new world, or America, who had any religion at all, were, when first discovered, universally addicted to it. Some of the West Indian heathen, among their other physical gods, had in particular their Chemems, or Chemim, that is, with little variation," Drow, Shemim, "whom they represented by idols of such a compound form, as appears an evident, though, monstrous, perversion of the cherubic emblems, and may, in some measure, serve to confirm the explanation above given thereof." See Mr. Parkhurst's valuable Greek and English Lexicon, under Dw.

I have given the above quotation to show that the heathen had the strongest idea of a plurality of Perfons in the Godhead; but, if you consult that gentleman's Hebrew and English Lexicon, under 272, page 296—304, you will find that the heathen representation of their gods was always compounded of more figures than one, sometimes only of two, but frequently of three; some way or other expressive of their ideas of fire, light, or air; of which I have shewn, in the preceding pages, that the animals in the cherubim were emblems with the man taken in.

The next word necessary to be duly understood is Kúpios; which is every where substituted, by the Septuagint, for Jehovah; and it is written, Philip. ii. II, And that every tongue should confess (or Kupios Indus.)

X 515-05)>

X_ξις τος), "that Jesus Christ is Lord," εις δοζαν, "in the "glory of God the Father." Also, I Cor. xii. 3, "No "man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy "Ghost." These names, thus defined, may prevent misunderstandings, and lead to the comprehending some sentences that may be hereafter quoted, so as to save the multiplying of words to explain my meaning.

I have already considered several texts in the gospel

I have already confidered feveral texts in the gospel by St. Matthew, preceding chapter ix. that I have quoted to confirm those prophecies to which they had a reference. I shall not therefore repeat them; but only observe, that as the objectors to the holy Scriptures catch at every word that affords them an opportunity to cavil with, and reject those divine oracles, so they ridicule Matt. ii. 23, and say Christ was carried to Nazareth, "that the prophecy might be pub-"lished," "he shall be called Mazarene." But Joseph and Mary did not do so to sulfil the prophecy in their intention, but because "Archelaus did reign" in Judea, in the room of his father Herod, he was "afraid to go thither." "Notwithstanding, being "warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee." "And he came and dwelt in a "city called Nazareth," &c. So that it was God that so ordered it, not Joseph.

In Matt. ix. 2, "They brought unto him (properly) a paralytic;" "and Jesus, seeing their faith, said unto "the paralytic, Son, be of good cheer" (rather have considence, or take courage), "thy sins be forgiven "thee." Ver. 3, "And behold certain of the scribes said "within themselves, This man blasphemeth." Ver. 4, "And Jesus, knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?" Here are two proofs of Christ's divinity. First, he forgives sins (comp. Colos.

Colof. iii. 13), and then shews plainly that he had a power in, and of himself, to forgive sins, by having healed the paralytic. Secondly, he manifested his Godhead by proving that he knew their thoughts.

In Matt. xii. 6, "I fay unto you, that in this place " is one greater than the temple." Ver. 8, "The Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath-day." Ver. 42, "Behold a greater than Solomon is here." Here Chrift afferts that he is greater than Solomon, yea, greater than the temple, and Lord of the Sabbath-day; which none ever pretended to, but God himself.

Again, our translation, in Matt. xii. 15; and xvi. 8, read, "But when Jesus knew it," and, "When " Jefus perceived." Both these texts give the sceptic room to suppose that Jesus did not perceive, or know, that "the Pharifees were confulting to deftroy " him;" or that "his disciples were secretly reasoning " among themselves," on what he had said, for some time, or until he was told of it. On the contrary, the Geek is, " yvss," a participle, aor. 2, therefore both those passages should be read; But Jesus knew, or perceived. I suppose there are other texts of the like import which require the fame alteration, and are of the number of those inaccurate readings with which the Deists make themselves merry; but "their mirth " is the madness of fools." (See Eccles. ii. 2.) If you confult Matt. xxii. 41-45; Mark xii. 35-37; Luke XX. 41, 44; you will find that Jefus Christ is applying to himself the fulfilment of the exth Psalm, ver. 1; whereby he claims the title of ארני, Adoni; which (if you examine the lxxxvith Pfalm, and xcvii. 5) you will find that Adoni and Jehovah are the same selfexisting Being.

Matt. xxvii. 4.3, "He faid, That I am the Son of "God." Chap. xxviii. 6, The angel faid to Mary, " Come, fee the place where the Lord (Gr. Kurios) " lay." Ver. 16, "Then the eleven disciples went " away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jefus " had appointed them." Ver. 17, " And (18autes) " feeing him, they worshipped him." If Christ is not a Person in the Godhead, the apostles worshipped a creature; and Jesus suffered them to adore him, to whom worship was not due, except he is very God. But, bleffed be his holy name, I find, ver. 18, "Jefus " came and fpake unto them, faying, "All power" (Εδοθη μοι) bath been given, or ascribed "unto me in " beaven and in earth." Ver. 19, "Go ye therefore, " and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name " of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy "Ghost *." Ver. 20, "And, lo! I am with you alway,

* " At the time of our Lord's incarnation," fays the Rev. Mr. Catcott, A. M. "the Jews acknowledged (I mean the faithful " Jews) that there were Three Perfons in Jehovah who had co-" venanted to redeem mankind, and that the expected Messiah was " one of them; and this confession of faith was revealed and re-" quired to be acknowledged from the fall; fo, to those who were " acquainted with the holy Scriptures (the Jews and profelytes) " this confession, viz. That Jesus was the Christ, or the Messiah, " was fufficient (the rest being supposed to have been known and " understood by them before); and such persons were, therefore, " baptized only in the name of Jesus; but the ignorant, and un-" believing, Gentiles were previously required to turn from the " vanities and idols they had worshipped, and serve the living " and true God; Acts xiv. 15; 1 Thef. i. 9. And Christ's com-" mand was, Matt. xxviii. 19, that fuch should be (and accord-" ingly they were) ' baptized in the name of the Father, and of " the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' And it is added, Mark xvi. " 16, 'He that believeth and is baptized shall be faved; but be " that believeth not shall be damued.' What were they to believe.

way, even unto the end of the world. Amen." Signifying, verily, certainly of a truth, &c. If he were a mere man he could not be in heaven, and with his disciples, at the same time.

As all wicked men, aided by all devils, have not been, nor ever will be, able to overturn the testimony of the holy Scriptures, you see, Sir, to what miserable shifts you must be driven, if you should attempt to support your Thesis. Compare Mark xvi. 15, 16, 20; Luke xxiv. 52.

or else suffer damnation for not believing, but the object of faith " proposed to them at haptism; namely, the existence and equality of the Three Persons in the Godhead, and their covenant to " redeem man, now actually effected? It therefore follows, that " as God has declared what his decree is, in relation to wilful, obstinate, unbelievers, so, as he cannot lie, he cannot pardon, " much less reward, the works of such, and admit them into his " presence in glory." " And it must be admitted as an incontest-" able truth in the schools of Christianity, that, before a man can " act aright, he must believe aright, that is, he must have that " faith which is of the operation of God;" Colof. ii. 12. " He " must clearly comprehend the plan of salvation as revealed in " the holy Scriptures, and comprehending the bleffed truths " therein exhibited, he must embrace them cordially with grati-" tude, thankfulness, and praise to God, for having so graciously " made known his love to man;" and he will then be led to love the holy, tri-une God, and will pray to be enabled to manifest his love to that gracious Being, by striving earnestly, diligently, and unremittingly, to "walk worthy of the vocation whereunto he is " called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering," and in love to God and man, "endeavouring to keep the unity " of the Spirit in the bond of peace."-" Walking circumspectly, or not as the fools, but as the wife, redeeming the time, because the days are evil; and, besides all this, he will seriously endea-" vour, and give all diligence, to add to his faith virtue-know-" ledge-temperance-patience-godliness-brotherly kindness "-charity" (την αμαπην), that is, acts of mercy, or universal benevolence.

In Mark v. 6—12, The devils adored Jesus by the tongue of a possessified man; when Jesus manifested his divine power by showing that they were under his control. Ver. 19, "Go tell thy friends how great" things the Lord hath done for thee." Ver. 20, "And he published in Decapolis how great things fesus had done for him." Compare Luke viii. 26, 39, whereby it appears that the Lord fesus and God are the same glorious Being.

Again, ver. 41, He raifes a young person from the dead by the bare fiat of his will, whose death was fully ascertained. Compare Matt. ix. 18—25; Luke viii. 51. See also Luke vii. 11—17, where we have another incontestable instance of the divine power of Jesus in calling a young man to life whom they were carrying to the grave. Jefus only fpeaks, and death yields up his victim. And in John xi. 43, He calls a man into life, health, and ftrength, that was "ftinking" in the grave. Here are three proofs of Christ's divinity, authenticated by fo many different witnesses as even no court of judicature could refift. Probably you will fay that Jesus prayed to his Father, in this last instance; because it is faid, ver. 41, "Father, I thank thee that" thou hast heard me." This is true; but it should be remembered, that Christ as God-man, Mediator, ever gave glory to the Father in all that he did; but at the same time he had taken care to let them know his equality with the Father; for in the preceding chapter he fays (as I have repeatedly shown), ver. 30, I and the Father we are one. One in essence, though different Persons. See John v. 18, 23; xii. 26; xix. 7.

Was I to enumerate all the proofs of the divinty of Jefus Christ, I might find it requisite to transcribe the greatest part of the four gospels; but as, in proving him to be Jehovah and God, I have quoted many paffages from those facred pages, I will only remark on a few more striking passages which I cannot well pass over. Luke ii. 10, 11, " And the angel faid unto "them, Fear not," ye: "For behold I bring you good" tidings of great joy, which shall be to all" the "peo-" ple;" or, perhaps, to all the nations, agreeable to Gen. xii. 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 18.—Ver. 11, "For unto you is born this day, in the city of David" (see Micah v. 2), "a Saviour who is Christ Lord." As the angel indisputably spake Hebrew (because it is not reafonable to suppose that those shepherds, being poor Jews, understood any other language), we may fairly conclude that the angel faid, for, "Saviour who is " Chrift Lord," אדני, or הוה כושיח הוה כושיח, A Saviour who is Chrift Jehovah; which accords with Eve's exclamation, I have got a Person of the Jehovah; Gen. iv. 1. Correspondent to this, there is a remarkable passage in Micah v. 2, of which I will endeavour to give a better translation than the common one, because more consonant to the divine original. And thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, reputed little among the thousands of Judah; yet from thee hath be gone forth of me, having been the ruler in Ifrael; and whose goings forth were of old from the days of eternity.

Here I must beg leave to remind you, Sir, that it was prophesied by Haggai, chap. ii. 9, "The glory" of this latter house" (the second temple) "shall be "greater than the former, saith the Lord of Hosts." You will recollect that in the former house (that is, the first temple), beside its external magnificence, and incredible riches, that it was in part composed of, there were the cherubim of glory in the holy of houses; "the ark of the covenant in which were the tables of et the law written by God himself; and over that the " mercy-feat from whence the divine oracles were " given out, by an audible voice, as often as God was " confulted in behalf of his people. It contained also " the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod "that budded and bloffomed, and yielded almonds. " (Numb. xvii. 8.) It had likewife the Schechinah, " or the divine presence, manifested by a visible cloud, " resting over the mercy-seat. The Urim and Thum-" mim, by which the high priest consulted Jehovah, " in difficult and momentous cases, relating to the " public interest of the nation; and the holy fire "wnich came down from heaven upon the altar at the confecrating of that temple." Here we have an account, Sir, of nine glories, if I may fo speak, that the latter temple was not honoured with. Favours, fuch as neither all the wisdom of man could attain, nor all the riches of this world purchase. Such as no other nation or people were ever favoured with, nor made the least pretensions to.-How, or by what means, then did the glory of that latter temple exceed the glory of the former temple, feeing that all those glorious confiderations, which were the admiration and envy of the world, were wanting in the latter temple, which has been destroyed, and its foundations erased, at least feventeen hundred years?—Has the word of God been broken? Has the promise failed? Impessible! By what means then has the promife been accomplished? I answer, "The desire of all nations came at the exact " time appointed (fee Dan. ix. 24-27), at the very " time that the world univerfally expected him; as your " reading has informed you; and he filled that latter " house with bis glory." (See Haggai ii. 7.) How? " Jehovah, whom they fought and were expecting, " fuddenly \widetilde{M}_{2}

"fuddenly came to bis temple," agreeable to the prophecy of Malachi iii. 1.—Thus, Sir, was the latter temple made more glorious than the former; for be, "in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily;" be who made the worlds; who is the brightness, the effulgence, of glory (see Heb. i. 2, 3), whom "the angels are commanded to worship;" and "whose throne is for ever and ever;" he was "God manifest in the slesh:" even Jesus Christ "the same yesterday and to-day, and for ever;" Heb. xiii. 8. "The Lord of glory;" I Cor. ii. 8. "The Prince, or Author of life; Acts iii. 15. "And the Author of eternal salvation unto all those that obey him;" Heb. v. 9.—Thus was the precious promise sulfilled, and Jehovah Aleim unutterably glorified.

And I know not where I can more properly obferve than in this place, that wherever Christ is particularly fpoken of as a man, he generally, if not always, manifests his Godhead either by some exertion of his divine power, or is shown to be of the Godhead by fome testimony from heaven.—Witness at his conception. See Matt. i. 18-23; Luke i. 26-38. At his nativity, Matt. ii. 1—3; Luke ii. 8—14. At his baptism, Matt. iii. 17; Mark i. 11; Luke iii. 22. When asleep in a storm, Matt. viii. 23-27; Mark iv. 37-41; Luke viii. 23-25. When he wept over Lazarus's grave, &c.; John xi. 35, 43-45; xii. 28-30, 45. And be afferts bis divinity in words that cannot be mifinterpreted, unless that be done wilfully; for he fays, John x. 23, " I give unto them eternal " lie." But the apostle says, Rom. vi. 23, "Eter-" nat life is the gift of God." Also, I John v. II, "God hath given to us eternal life." But observe, "This life is in his Son." From all which it is incontrovertible that Jesus Christ is God. And he who believeth not that Jesus Christ is the true God, and the life eternal (see 1 John v. 20, in the original), "The "wrath of God abideth on him;" John iii. 36.

Having now proved the divinity of the Lord Jefus Christ incontestably, I will show presently that he was worshipped by those who would not have done so had not Christ been of the Godhead. But permit me first to observe upon a passage in Luke xviii. where a Pharifee and a Publican are reprefented as " going up into the temple to pray." Their various characters and different address to God you may read, ver. 10-14. The former plumed himfelf upon what he was; the other "fmote upon his breaft, faying, "God be merciful to me a finner." What is the refult of their different address? Hear it from the lips of truth, of infallibility. " I," who cannot be deceived, even "I tell you this man (the publican) went down " to his house justified," " exerves, the other not." You will perceive that I have altered the translation from the common reading, because that supposes a doubt whether either was justified, by the translators having added, "rather than," for there is not any words in the original which admit of fuch a meaning, as you will find, if you examine the Greek text*.

Again,

^{*} To prevent any one from cavilling at this translation, I think it necessary to observe, I cannot find, that \hat{n} occurs any where in the sense of "rather than," except Matt. xviii. 8, 9; and Luke xviii. 14; and surely the last is a very forced construction of \hat{n} . The evangelist Luke understood Greek perfectly; and when he would express the words, "rather than," in the true sense of them, he writes " $\mu \dot{\alpha} \lambda \lambda v \hat{n}$;" Acts v. 29; xx. 35; last clause, which, I humbly suppose, should be read, It is blessed to give rather than to receive. (See the Greek text.) And in Matt. xviii. 8, \hat{n} is read, "rather than," and in the same sentence, "or." But, in Luke M 3

Again, in Mark xiv. 14; and Luke xxii. 11, They have rendered, ourobegnorn, "good man:" which I fear leads many people to suppose themselves good in their nature; good in their practice. Let such examine Psal. v. 9; x. 7; xiv. 1—4; liii. 1—4; Prov. i. 11—18; Isa. lix. 7, 8; Rom. iii. 10—18; Gal. iii. 22; and compare Ephes. ii. 1—13; where they or you will see that all such conceits are non-entities. For Isaiah (that illustrious prophet and martyr, as before shown) says, chap. lxiii. 6, "We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." If be was constrained to make this humiliating confession, where is the man, in our day, that has any real pretension to say otherwise? I am certain, not one.

Luke xxii. 65, "Many other things blasphemously "spake they against him" (Christ). You know, Sir, that the word blasphemy is "an offering of some in-"dignity unto God himself;" therefore the evangelist would have made use of some other expression is Christ is not really and truly God.

Luke xxiii. 45, "Then opened he their understandxviii. 14, has it a proper affinity with the context? The Lord Jesus Christ is speaking of the justification of a sinner before God; and shews that to see and seel ourselves of so deep a dye as to lead us, with the most profound humiliation, to cry for mercy from a heart-felt fense of our great unworthiness, and exceeding finfulness, is the first beginning of that "repentance unto life" which will never be repented of; and proves that fuch felf-abasement will lead us to true faith, to all godliness, to love, and holy obedience; not from a principle of flavish fear, but of that holy love, which will render us the fcorn of ungodly men, the envy of devils, but will manifest that "we are sealed unto the day of redemption." Further, if must be considered here as a conjunction rather than an adverb; and perhaps may be a Hebraism, as the learned, and indefatigable, William Du Gard, of the last century, and John Dawson, A.B. of the present, have defined it, fignifying, "non." " ing

"ing that they might understand the Scriptures." Was it ever known that any one, beside the omniscient God, could open a man's intellectual faculties, and enable him to comprehend the most sublime mysteries; such as even "angels desire to comprehend," but cannot? Oh! No. Then Christ is a Person in the Godhead. Beside it is said, ver. 52, "And they " (the apostles) worshipped him." Then, if Christ be not trully God, they were idolaters, and be who could have manifested his displeasure for their so doing eonnived (with reverence I speak) at it. But, on the contrary, they " returned to Jerusalem with great " joy;" such as Christians sometimes taste, but Socinians never did taste, nor ever will.

In Letter xv. page 183, to W. Tayleur, Esq. you have said, "Julian (meaning, I suppose, the apostate emperor Julian) "says, that neither Paul, nor Mat-"thew, nor Luke, nor Mark, dared to call Jesus God, but honest John, after the death of Peter and " Paul." If this is not your opinion, as well as that of Julian, I naturally suppose that you would have made fome observation upon it to have difgraced it; but, on the contrary, you say, "Other philosophers, however, continued to repeat the same objection." Which fully manifest that you approve his affertion; though nothing can be more opposite to truth as you know, or ought to have known, by professing yourself a Christian minister. But though you, or all of your persuastian minister. But though you, or all of your persuastian minister. But though you, or all of your persuastian, should die under your own deceivings, the apostle and evangelist Matthew hath declared it in several passages that I have quoted; as hath St. Mark and St. Luke. And you, yourself, have admitted that St. John boldly contends for the invaluable truth. Here it may be proper to observe, that M 4 though

though the apostles frequently mention the name of God only in the fingular number, yet, in most of their epistles, they fend gratulations from two of (sometimes from all) the divine Persons, and thereby give the churches to understand, that, although they mention but one God, there are a plurality of Persons in the Godhead. See Rom. xv. 13, 16, 30; 1 Theff. i. 1; 1 Tim. i. 1; 1 Pet. i. 1, 2. And though the Lord Jesus Christ fays, "I ascend to my Father and your Father, " my God and your God," he fpake Hebrew, and faid, to my Aleim and to your Aleim, whereby he did not exclude himself from the Godhead; because he had two natures, the human and the divine; and he is here speaking in his human nature. But what was the confequence of Julian's having been a Socinian? Truly a very dreadful one (I pray God that you may not experience the fame; but allow me to remind you that the fame causes generally produce the same effects). "When he was preparing for a grand expe-"dition, in which he meant to extirpate Christianity, " one of his adherents asked a humble follower of the " meek and lowly Jefus what the Carpenter's Son was "doing while fuch great preparations were making to deftroy his cause in the world?" The poor Christian replied, "He is making a coffin for your em-" peror." Which came to pass, for he was killed in the contest with the Christians and Persians; and, when that apostate was dying, he was so hardened, that " he threw a dart into the air as if he meant to wound Christ (Dr. Adam Littleton fays, "Julian threw a handful of his blood into the air"), faying, "Me vicifti "Galilæe." "Thou hast conquered me, O Galilæan!" In Matt. xxiv. 2; Mark xiii. 2; Luke xix. 44;

xxi. 6, The Lord Christ had foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, and the total demolition of the temple, whose construction his apostles so much admired; " and, as if moved by a divine impulse, Titus Vespa" sian commanded his army to dig up the very " foundations of the city, and of the temple;" whereby was sulfilled the prophecy of Jer. xxvi. 18; and Micah iii. 12. And, "when he entered Jerusalem, " and viewed all the fortifications of it, its advanta-" geous fituation, &c. that prince, though a heathen, "owned the all-powerful arm of the God of Ifrael;" and, in a transport of joy and admiration, cried out, "It is manifest that Israel's God hath fought for us, " and has driven the Jews from those towers, fince " neither the utmost human force, nor that of all the " engines in the world, could have effected it." Josephus, lib. iii. cap. 46.—But that apostate (Julian), difregarding the excellent observations of Titus Verspafian, and despising the prophecies recorded Jer. xxvi. 18; and Mic. iii. 12, "Thus faith the Lord of Hosts, " Zion shall be plowed like a field, and Jerusalem " shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house " (temple) as the high places of the forest:" I say, that, notwithstanding this and our Lord's declarations in the passages alluded to in the preceding page, Julian, though he had been incontestably assured that Jehovah had fulfilled those prophecies, by Titus Vespasian, yet he lifted up his arm of impotence against Christ's omnipotence; who had said, Luke xxi. 24, " Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles shall be suffilled." But, in order to remove this incontestable standing proof of Christ's power over the kingdoms of this world, that apostate emperor, "Julian, gave the Jews leave " to build their city and temple; and recommending " the

" the affair to Alopius, one of his generals, ordered " him to use the u most dispatch that those might be " rebuilt as foon as possible; which matter, when " Alypius applied himfelf earnestly to, and was also " affifted in it by the governor of the province, dread-" ful globes of fire sprang out frequently from near " the foundations, and, having confumed feveral of the " workmen, rendered the place inacceffible; and thus, " as that element continued perfeveringly to repel " them, they were necessitated to give up the under-" taking." " This is related by Ammianus Marcel-" linus, lib. xxiii. cap. 1, a heathen officer in Julian's " army, and an admirer of Julian's valour and wif-" dom;" fo that no doubt can be reasonably made of the truth of it; whereby Christ's watchful providence and power over his world, and over the affairs of men, are fully demonstrated. You may now perceive, Sir, what a wretch that Julian was. Is it possible, therefore, that you can adopt his fayings, and countenance his accurfed principles? or rank him among the number of "philosophers?" But, if such be their characters, "O, my foul, come not thou into their fe-" cret; unto their affembly, mine honour, be not thou " united." Gen. xlix. 6.

CHAP. X.

Shows that the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ was irrefutably manifested after his resurrection.—That the expression, "God the Father," frequently means the whole divine Trinity, clearly proved; and that the apostle Peter preached in Hebrew at Jerusalem.—A note, wherein is shown Dr. Priestley's acknowledgment, that Christ raised himself from the dead.

A FEW proofs of Christ's divinity from the evangelist John, and then I proceed to some observations you do not expect. John xix. 7, "The Jews an-" fwered him (Pilate), We have a law, and by our law " he ought to die; because he made himself the Son " of God." Here they confessed the truth in part only. They might have gone further; for it appears, by chap. x. 31, that "they took up stones to stone "him." Why? Ver. 33, "For blasphemy, and be-" cause that thou, being a man, makest thyself God." Indeed the Jews could not mifunderstand Christ; he spake so plain of himself as a Person of the Aleim, and by his miracles fo fully proved his divinity, as to put the matter out of all doubt to every one who does not shut his eyes wilfully against the blessed truth, or is not judicially blinded; as is irrefutably the case of the Jews in this day. And how is it possible that Socinians can "escape if they despise his great salvation!" See Heb. ii. 3. " I tell you, nay; for, except ye repent, " ye will all likewife perifh;" Luke xiii. 3.

Again, by John xx. 19—23, We learn that Jesus had appeared to the disciples, and talked with them,

&c. Ver. 24, "But Thomas, one of the twelve, " called Didymus, was not with them when Jefus " came." Ver. 25, shews the incredulity of Thomas; and ver. 26, 27, the certainty of Christ's being acquainted with our words, though not prefent to our natural fight; and, having manifested this to the disciples, he most graciously condescends to give Thomas the most indubitable evidence of his divinity, and of his refurrection, which were fo fully and clearly attefted to his (Thomas) own outward fenses, as to lead him to cry out in holy admiration, "My Lord and my "God!" I would ask you, Sir, whether, if Jesus Christ had been "only a man, a mere man, like our-" felves," whether he would not on this occasion have shewn Thomas, that in addressing him as Lord and God, he was guilty of idolatry, and thereby have prevented all his followers from ascribing to him the titles which were not his due? I am bold to fay, that, had he been less than God, he dared not to have done otherwife; because Aleim, or God, had declared, Ifa. xlij. 3, and xlviii. 11 (as before repeated), " My glory " will I not give to another."

Again, chap. xxi. 17, Peter calls Christ Lord, and ascribes omniscience to him; for he says, "Lord, "thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love "thee." There are two other texts which incontestably prove Christ's almighty power, even since his resurrection; they are recorded Acts iii. 6, and ix. 34. The first respects a man lame from his birth; the second had kept his bed eight years; yet at the name, the melodious name, of Jesus Christ the cripple receives all needful strength, and is enabled to leap up and to walk as if he had never been lame. The latter, though forely afflicted for eight years with the palfy, receives a perfect cure in a moment. The apostle fays, " Eneas, Tefus Christ maketh thee whole."-" And he arose immediately."-If Christ had been " a mere man like ourselves," would those dreadful maladies have quitted their dominion inflantly? Or would those pitiable objects have been relieved from their deplorable fituation as foon as the bleffed name of Jesus was uttered? No. Had he not been "God " over all bleffed for ever," the apostles might as well have named Tiberius Cæfar, or Pontius Pilate, and it would have had as much effect. Also the protomartyr Stephen, in his dying moments, under the hands of his murderers, "looking up stedsaftly to heaven, " faw the glory of God, and Jefus standing at the " right hand of God," " calling upon, and faying, " Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Therefore, unless you can invalidate the evidence of the four evangelists, and prove that all the men of learning and genius, who have embraced the holy doctrine of Christ's divinity, were either fools, mad, or filly enthuafiafts, you must give up the point; otherwise you tacitly presume to be wifer than them all; which I am willing to hope is not your pretension *. I acknowledge that some parts of the Acts

^{*}The apossle Paul says, "I can do all things through Christ, who "strengtheneth me;" Pail. iv. 13. If Carist be only "a mere man," how could be strengthen Paul? For Christ was crucified before that 'possle had the least knowledge of him. The righteouniers of Carist is called "the righteouniers of God;" Phil. iii. 8, 9; 2 Cor '21; and compare Matt. vi. 33. In that sweet prayer, recorded John xvii Christ says, "O Father, glorify thou "me with thine own sel, with the glory which I had with thee "before the world was." And Paul says, t Cor. xv. 47, "The fecond man is the Lord from heaven." The royal psalmist says, Psal. xxiii. 1, "Jehovah is my shepherd." Jesus Christ says, "I am

Acts of the Apostles give room to suppose that Christ is inferior to the Father; and perhaps no one passage more than chap. v. 30-32; wherein there are two words added that are not in the original, viz. "to be," which give the 31st verse a sense that favours Arians and Socinians, but dishonours the Lord Jesus Christ; therefore I will give the passage its proper reading, and then remark upon it. Ver 30, "The God of our " Fathers raifed up Jefus whom ye flew and fuspended " on a tree. Ver. 31, Him hath God exalted to his " right hand, a prince and a Saviour, to give repent-" ance to Ifrael and forgiveness of sins." In 2 Tim. ii. 25, "Repentance is faid to be the gift of God;" therefore Christ is God. But Christ is a Prince, and also a Saviour; both to fave us from our fins, Matt. i. 21, and to forgive us our fins. See Matt. ix. 2-8; Mark ii. 3-12; Luke v. 18-26. In all those places the Scribes and Pharifees accuse him of being guilty of blasphemy. Why? Because he had said to the paralytic man, "Son, thy fins be forgiven thee;" for they knew, and faid, that "no one could forgive fins but "God alone." And even wicked King Jehoram knew that no one could cure a man of the leprofy but the Lord God omnipotent; for when he had read the letter that the King of Syria fent to him, defiring Jehoram to cure his generalissimo, Naaman, of his leprofy; that king rent his clothes, and faid, "Am I God, to kill " and to make alive, that this man doth fend unto me " to recover a man of his leprofy?" Yet, you know it is irrefutably attested, that Christ cured ten lepers at once by the bare flat of his will; Luke xvii. 11-19. In fhort Jesus Christ gave fight to the blind; he enabled the lame to walk, "and to leap as an hart;" the lepers were cleanfed; the deaf had their hearing made perfect; and the dead were revived by the bare word of his command. See Matt. xi. 2—6; Luke vii. 18— 23; and compare Ifa. xxxv. 3-6; and you will find it was God who should come and do all those wonderful things. But perhaps you will fay that it was the God of the fathers of Ifrael that raifed up Jefus, and it was God in the fingular number, O ⊕665, that exalted him, &c. I confess that it has come down to us in the Greek tongue exactly so; but permit me to defire you will look back to page 154, where you will find a definition of the noun Osos, Theos, that will not admit of your triumphing, even in that word; beside you know the apostle Peter, who is the speaker here, was born a Jew, was preaching to the Jewish multinude; and therefore, indifputably, spake to them always in the Hebrew tongue; as we may reasonably infer from Acts xxi. 37, 40. Indeed to have preached to them in any other language would have been as abfurd, as for a man who should solicit the suffrages and interest of the citizens of London (for any appointment he might defire) to address them in the French tongue. You know, Sir, how fuch an application would be treated; and, it is highly probable, had St. Peter preached in any other tongue than the Hebrew, his auditory would have been fo fmall as that inftead of converting three thousand souls, by one fermon, Acts ii. 41, he would have had no more feals thereto than a Sociaian teacher. Then, as his preaching in Hebrew must have been the fact (fee Luke xxiv. 47), he faid, Acts v.

[&]quot;I am the good Shepherd;" John x. 11, 14; Pfal. exxi. 2; exxxiv. 3. Jehovah made heaven and earth. The apostles, John and Paul, positively affert that "Christ Jesus made the heavens" and the earth" See how many evidences against your notions the above few lines contain.

30, 31, The Aleim of our fathers raised up, exalted, &c. which does not exclude the divinity of Jesus, nor contradict the passage in John x. 18, "I have power to lay it down (my life), and I have power to take "it again;" because Christ being a Person in the Aleim, he was a party in the act; and the "raising up "Jesus, who had been slain," alluded only to his human nature, the body *. Thus we may clear up Mark

* I find (in what Dr. Priestley calls a Catechism, written by himseif, fifth edition, page 31) the following question. "What " proof did Christ give of his divine mission?"—" Answer. "He * healed multitudes of fick perfons by a word fpeaking. He gave " fight to the blind, raifed persons from the dead, and rose himself " from the grave after he had been dead three days, as he had " foretold."-Here Dr. Prieftley gives us an account, from the holy Scriptures, that Christ performed the most wonderful works "by a word speaking;" such as were never, nor ever could be, done by any power or being but that of the Lord God himself; for, favs Dr. Priestley, "he gave fight to the blind, raised persons "from the dead, and rose himself."—The verb that he uses, viz. " rofe," Dr. Johnson fays, is "the preterite of rise;" which fignifies, " to change a jacent or recumbent to an erect posture; to be revived from death," &c. &c. We must, therefore, necessarily understand Dr. Priestley's expression to mean that Christ rose of himself from the grave without any other power; for, although the Doctor has omitted the preposition of, it must (according to the idiom of our language) be understood; which is the same as if he had faid, Christ raised himself; because Dr. Priestley has been telling his pupils, that Jesus Christ raised others from the dead by the bare word of his command, confequently he raifed himfelf by the same omnipotent power; for no power, less than Almighty, could raife a ffinking body from the grave as Christ did. See John ii. 19-21; vi. 54; xi. 39, 43, 44. And I cannot find the verb " role," in any other fense than as a voluntary act, or felf-moving cause, in any part of the Scriptures; but it occurs in that sense forty-fix times. Should Matt. xxvii. 52, be brought as an exception, I would reply that the word there translated "arose," is in the original, 12666, 2d perf. fing. 1st aorist, passive; therefore, fignifics, Mark x. 18, without contending that O Osos ought not to be the conclusion of that verse. For as there cannot be any doubt that Christ preached to the Jews in Hebrew, herthere faid, "Why callest thou me good? None (is) good except the one Aleim; or, if you please, "except one," the Aleim. As if he had said; except the uracknowledge my Godhead, "why calleft " thou me good? None is good fave one, the Aleim." See Luke xviii. 18. Befide most Christian divines know, I suppose (though you may deny it), that " the God of our fathers" implies the Holy Trinity; as I humbly hope I have fufficiently proved in this tract. Also the Father * is often spoken of, in the New Testament, as implying all the divine Persons; which I take to have been the idea of the translators when they rendered Coloff. i. 19, "For it pleafed the "Father that in him should all fulness dwell."

fignifies that each of those bodies of the saints had been raised; not by their own power, but in consequence of Christ's resurrection, as the context shows; and which strengthens Dr. Priestley's affertion, that "Christ rose himself," or rose of himself, agreeable to John ii. 19, 21, wherein Dr. Priestley has the honour for once to agree with the evangelists.

* I can find no more than three texts, in the Old Testament, where God calls bimself a Father; and those are Psal. lxviii. 5; Jer. xxxi. 9; and Isa. ix. 6; the last of which is given to Christ so clearly and explicitly as not to be disputed. And when the Jews endeavour to claim kindred with God in Isa. lxiii. 16, they say, "Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not; thou Jebovah art our Father, "our Redeemer, from everlasting is thy name." Here, you see, they unite the Father and the Redeemer by the name Jehovah; and say from everlasting is thy name. And Christ is called, Isa. ix. 6, "The everlasting Father." And in John x. 15, Christ claims the fullest equality with the Father; for says he, "As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father." And John xvi. 15, "All things that the Father hath are mine."

Whereas that text ought to have been rendered, Because in him all the fulness hath delighted to dwell. All the fulness of what? All the fulness of the Godhead; agreeably to what the apostle afferts in chap. ii. 9, "For in him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

I should not have been so copious, nor have dwelt so long on the proof of the divinity of the glorious Redeemer Christ Jesus, but that, I am satisfied, it is "a truth which imparts unutterable dignity to Christianity; a truth which lays an immovable soundation for all the comfortable hopes of a Christian; a truth which will render the mystery of our redemption the wonder and delight of eternity." Hervey.

CHAP. CXI.

A few texts altered from the common reading; because the Arians, &c. support their opinions chiefly on that authority; which texts, when duly translated, make strongly against their notions.—Several of Dr. Priestley's affertions shown to be self-contradictory and remarked upon. Cicero's true character briestly hinted at.

I HAVE now proved that all the perfections of Deity, are ascribed to Jesus Christ; that the power of Jehovah was manifested in him, and exhibited by him.

I will now correct a few more texts, and then conclude this part of my title page, viz. The divinity of Chrift.

1 Cor. i. 30. The common reading of this text makes Jesus Christ inserior to God, and I have frequently quently heard different orthodox ministers say (in preaching from it), "who of God," "that is," say they, "God the Father;" as if in this, and every other appointment, Christ was only to be considered as subordinate. But if we translate the original justly, and accurately, we shall find that the following is its proper signification. "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus," who hath been made unto us the wisdom of God, and also righteousness, fanctification, and redemption.

Again, Coloff. i. 15. This text, as it stands in our translation, is one of the main pillars of Arianism; and I can be eafily perfuaded that the Socinians do not overlook it. But though men and devils should oppose me, as I expect they will, I am certain that I shall never fee it requifite to give up the following translation; because I know it is agreeable to the whole facred Scriptures of divine truth; for if the following be not a just translation of the verse, what becomes of the context, ver. 16—19, agraily to the just reading of verse 19, which I have given in page 178?— Ver. 15, then, should be thus rendered, "Who is " the" exact likeness " of the invisible God," the first cause of the whole CREATION. The Greek of the last clause, on which the argument turns, is " जवकारामाला " ωασης κτίσεως."—" Πρωτοτοκος is compounded of πρωτος, " first; and τετοκα, perf. mid. of τικτω;" which Professor Robertson translates, "pario, gigno, creo," to bring forth, to beget, to create. Therefore I have rendered that word the first cause; because the root, from whence the word is derived, has the meaning of original production in the fullest sense; and, wastes nriσεω;, of the whole creation;—for had the Holy Spirit meant "every creature," the words I reasonably suppose would have been wases κτισματος. And that the reading I have given the clause is a proper one, the N 2 whole whole context shews from ver. 14-19. Observe the whole context shews from ver. 14—19. Observe the last clause of verse 16, All things were created by him and for him; and the first clause of verse 17, Autos ες ε ωρο ωαντων, He is before all; denoting his eternal pre-existence: "and by him all things consist," or subsist; denoting his omnipotence, wisdom, and goodness. Os ες ωρνη της κτισξος. "He is the beginning, head, or "efficient cause, of the creation." (See Parkhurst's Gr. and Eng. Lex. p. 74, 1st col. iv.) See also Rev. v. 13, where παν κτισμα is rendered, "every creature." And I find fix texts, which is all in the New Testament, where the word creation occurs, and they are all from μτισις, not μτισμα. In Coloss. iii. 13, Christ is declared to pardon believers. In ver. 16, The apostle exhorts the church at Colosse, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom."—But this "word of Christ" is called the "word of "God," in at least forty texts of the New Testament; and in verse 24 the apostle adds, "for ye serve the Lord Christ." And it was reasonable to pay him divine fervice, because he pardons sin, which is the sole prerogative of the Lord God Almighty. See Matt. ix. 2; Mark iii. 5; Luke v. 20.

Now, Sir, as neither you, nor any other man, can possibly overturn the evidence of " fo great a cloud of "witnesses;" what have you to plead, in arrest of judgment, for blasphemy against "the King of kings and "Lord of lords;" Rev. xix. 16. You, yourself, acknowledge that "there is an act of parliament " which makes you guilty of blasphemy." How is it that this act is not more attended to?

After expressing myself so openly, I expect that no argument which your genius can produce, that all the zealous admirers of Arius and Socinus can invent, will be wanting to anathematize me. But when you find that logical arguments cannot avail from their futility; when the expedients of genius are exhausted, and when you experience every other subterfuge to be ineffectual, I have not the least doubt but you will call in question the authenticity of the divine records contained in the holy Scriptures. Do you ask upon what foundation I erect so uncharitable a superstructure? I answer, I am forry to fay from the writings of Joseph Priestley, LL.D. F.R.S. Do you demand volume and page? Alas! for you, Sir, this is not a task of the least difficulty, because you affirm in your letters to William Tayleur, Esq. Vol. II. p. 32, 33, "Another great cause of infidelity with philosophical and speculative people is happily ceasing, and in time must be entirely removed—I mean the many corruptions and abuses which have been introduced into Christianity from " foreign fources.—The principal of these, besides the doctrines that are peculiar to the Roman Catho- lics, are those of a Trinity of Persons in the God-"head, original fin, arbitrary predestination, atonement for the fins of men by the death of Christ, and " (which has perhaps been as great a cause of infidelity as any other) is the doctrine of the plenary inspiration of the Scripture." And the Rev. Mr. Madan quotes fome other part of your writings, where you fay, "Paul reafons inconclusively;" and that the writings of this apostle abound "with analogies and "antitheses on which no very serious stress is to be laid." Well might the prophet say, "Lord, what is man!" I never knew or heard of a stronger proof of the imbecility of human nature, nor a more ftriking conviction that "the wildom of this world is foolifhness " with God," than is manifested in your writings. But this is not all; for you quote and approve the affertion of that that wicked apostate Emperor Julian (as I have already fhewn), who fays, "that neither Paul, nor Matthew, " nor Luke, nor Mark, dared to call Jesus God, but " honest John after the death of Fiter and Paul." The quotations I have made, pages 167, 168, from the writings of those apostles and evangelists prove that apostate either did not understand what he read, or that he wilfully advanced a falsehood. Does not Paul fay, Rom. ix. 5, "Christ is over all, God blessed for "ever. Amen." Colos. ii. 9, "In him (Christ) dwell-" eth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Matt. i. 21, "His name shall be called "Jesus the Saviour;" ver. 23, "His name shall be called Emmanuel; that " is, Ged with us." See also chap. xxviii. 19: and Mark, in chap. ii. 5; iv. 39; v. 13, 19, 20; vi. 44, 49, manifests the power of God exhibited by Christ; and in a most remarkable manner, in chap. xiv. 13, where he fays to two of his disciples, "Go ye into the " city, and there shall meet you," "not barely a per-" fon, but the fex and age are both specified; -not " two, or feveral, but one man; -not within any given " fpace of time, but at the very instant of your arrival; "-not empty handed, but bearing a veffel;-not of " wood, or metal, but an earthen pitcher;-filled not " with wine or milk, but with water; -car ying it into "that very house where the preparation was made, " and the paffover was to be celebrated." Does not this prove that "his glance pierced into futurity; " espied events in all their circumstances, and with " the utmost perspicuity, before they came into " being?" Theron and Aspasso, Letter VIII. p. 183. See also page 88 of this tract. And Luke, in several places, shews that devils, as well as men, were constrained to acknowledge his divinity. See chap. iv. 34;

that

vi. 8; vii. 14; viii. 29, 39; xxii. 65; xxiv. 45, 52. By all of those cannot you perceive any danger to your name as a Christian teacher, as well as to your eternal interest, to take up such opinions without due examination; to say nothing of the injury done to the souls of your fellow citizens and fellow subjects? And what must the considerate, unprejudiced, part of mankind think after reading what follows, which I have extracted from your writings? Will they not naturally conclude that your religious principles, at the best, are vague and unsettled? Because you say (in state contradiction to what I have quoted above from your own works) in your Letters to Mr. Tayfrom your own works) in your Letters to Mr. Tay-leur, Vol. II. page 35, 6, "If you wish to know what, "in my opinion, a Christian is bound to believe with "respect to the Scriptures, I answer, that the books which are universally received as authentic are to be considered as faithful records of past transactions, and especially the account of the intercourse that the Divine Being has kept up with mankind from the beginning of the world to the time of our Saviour and his apostles. No Christian is answerable for more than this."—Here you admit the testimony of the Old Testament clearly explicitly fully while you deny Old Testament clearly, explicitly, fully, while you deny the necessity of giving the same honour to the New Testament. But this opinion contradicts your own affertions, opinions, &c. to the fame gentleman; for in Vol. I. page 1, you fay, "We live in an age in "which many perfons of a philosophical turn of mind are disposed to reject revelation. This you and I equally lament. But we consider it as a temporary circumstance, since the principles of true philosophy lead to the most satisfactory conclusion in favour " of it."

This latter paragraph would have done you great credit, Sir, as it is a truth that can never be overthrown; but, when you compare it with the preceding ones (quoted in page 181), what can you think of your affertions; especially when you duly reflect upon what follows, extracted from your own writings? "It is either "a misunderstanding of the nature and object of true " revealed religion, or an inattention to the nature of " its evidence, that is the cause of the present unbe-" lief." Also your seventh letter in the same volume gives fuch irrefutable just reasons, for the truth of the histories of the New Testament, as must leave you inexcusable (in the fight of God and all true Christians) for rejecting any part of the evidence of those sacred, invaluable, books; for you fay, Letter VII. p. 57, 58, "It is fact that these histories (meaning the four gos-pels and the book of Acts) are genuine productions of the age to which they are usually ascribed, and that they were written whilst the chief actors in the " fcene, and many of the witnesses of the great facts "were living; it could not therefore but have been well known, at the time of the publication, whether " the transactions recorded in those books really hap-" pened.—That these histories were esteemed as true " by great numbers, who were more competent in judges in the case than any persons, now living in England, can be of the revolution under King Wil-" liam."—" To fay nothing of the universal reception " of the epiftles of Paul as really his, I will venture "to fay that it is as impossible for any impartial person to peruse them without being as well satisfied, with respect to their genuineness, as to those of Cicero; the mention of particular events, persons, and places, 66 being so frequent in them, so consistent with each " other, other, and with the history of the time." Notwithstanding these laudable testimonies you say (as I have shown, p. 181), "Paul reasons inconclusively" (that is, without fuch evidence as is requisite to determine the understanding), "and that the writings of this apostle" abound with analogies" (uncertain resemblances), "and antitheses" (oppositions, contrasts; that is, in fhort, contradictions). But whether Dr. Priestley ought to be admitted as in any, even the least degree, a proper judge in this case, let these quotations reply, Would not the refult of the enquiry be totally unqualified? Especially if we advert to another of his own asfertions in favour of revelation; where he fays (Letter VIII. p. 88), "What then but truth, under every dif-" advantage, external and internal, could have pro-" cured it (Christianity) that establishment which, in " about three centuries, it acquired through the whole " extent of the Roman empire, and even among " many of the barbarous nations beyond the bounds " of it, to the extermination of all the other modes " of religion which had prevailed in them before?"

Again, lastly, you say, Vol. II. Let. XVII. p. 210, "The Gentiles, seeing a wonderful correspondence between the predictions and the events, would be fensible of the divinity of the whole system of revelation begun in Judaism, and completed in Christianity."

With respect to what you say of St. Paul's "reason-" ing inconclusively," I would reply, it is incontestably certain that St. Paul had his temporal education under the learned Gamaliel; and was well instructed in the Levitical law, &c. as is manifested by his epistle to the Hebrews. And as to his attainments in the Christian religion, he says (as before shown), Gal. i. 12, "I neither received it of man, neither was I

" taught, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." And that was perfected "in Paradife," where he heard un-ipeakable words, fuch as were not possible for a man to utter. See 2 Cor. xii. 1—4. Now, Sir, it is incumbent upon you to shew where that great apostle argues inconclusively, if you can do so; but I am clearly convinced that you cannot produce a fingle instance from the Greek Testament; and had his writings been as your felf-contradictory account states them, " abounding with analogies and antitheses," they could not have been divinely inspired by him who is infinite in wifdom; "Who doth great things past " finding out; yea, and wonders without number." See Job ix. 5—10, and compare Rom. xi. 33, 34. Also, had not St. Paul wrote by divine inspiration, would his writings have been preferved fo accurately for more than seventeen hundred years? No, you know that they would have perished ages ago, because they are holy and spiritual; therefore "the carnal mind is "ever at enmity with them;" and that natural enmity would have long fince extirpated them, and their adherents (as your friend the Emperor Julian endeavoured to do), had they not been preserved by a divine power. Do you say the writings of Cicero have been preserved longer than the New Testament, because written prior to it; and why should they have escaped the ravages of time, and the hand of destruction, any more than St. Paul's writings? I reply, because they fuit the tafte and genius of the men of this world; and it is also highly probable that Divine Providence caused Cicero's to be preferved, to show that "the world by (its) " wisdom knew not God," nor could attain to any requifite knowledge of him; and likewife to demonftrate that, although Cicero was a wife man, in what related related to the things of time and sense, he was as great a fool in what pertained to the life of godliness as the most unlearned, as the dullest genius, that ever took up a pen; as were some others of his stamp, men esteemed by the world; that it might be made irresutably manifest that divine instruction can only be obtained from the divine oracles of the holy Scriptures; and it is the more marvellous that St. Paul's, or any other writings, of holy men of any age or date, should have been fo long preferved; because these were, and are, diametrically opposite to the carnal minds of men; contrary to the spirit of the world, to the natural bias and pursuits of the men of the world; to the maxims, and to every thing, that the generality of the world esteem. Who then could preferve the apostle's writings under all those disadvantages? None but he that inspired them; "who is over all God blessed for evermore." But permit me, Sir, to recommend to your ferious attention, the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th chap. of St. Paul's 2d Epiftle to the Corinthians. These, alone, if considered only as evidences of the apostle's clear connected reasonings, and the excellency of the doctrines which he preached and published, are among the best compositions, to answer the purposes thereby intended, that ever were penned; for, although fome parts of the 4th and 6th chapters feem paradoxical to those who are not "spiritually " minded," yet they are exceedingly interesting; because cheering, edifying, and unutterably consolatory, to those who have "tasted that the Lord is gracious." What are the too much admired eclogues of Virgil? What the orations of Tully? What the pithy fayings, or fprightly fallies, of Shakespeare's wit, compared with these? They are "as founding brass, or as tinkling " cymbals;" nugatory, fhort-lived, transitory, uninteresting;

teresting; and, "like the crackling of thorns under a er pot," all blaze and noise, with little transient light, and no durable warmth; and all the other canonical books of the holy Scriptures have as demonstrative evidence of their divine origin and authenticity as those above referred to. The Epistle of St. James, if we attend to it only fuperficially, does not admit of fo much being faid of its authenticity (when compared with the other parts of holy writ) as the writings of the other apostles do; because to an inattentive reader, and to an inexperienced humble Christian, it seems (particularly from some parts of the second chapter) as if that apostle contradicted several important passages of St. Paul's and St. Peter's preaching and writings; but those who are young men, or fathers in Christ, perceive a fweet agreement, a beautiful concordance, that harmonize perfectly, and answer " as face answers " to face in a glass;" fo that although they do not extol St. James above his brethren in the apostleship, as do the Arians and Socinians, yet they efteem him a divinely inspired writer, and are truly thankful to Almighty God for his epiftle. But it may be necessary to observe that the last clause of chap. ii. ver. 14, should not be read, "can faith fave him;" because the original is, "μη δυναται ή πίς ις σῶσαι ἀυτόν ?" that faith cannot fave him? Which agrees with the other apostolic writings, and contradicts none of them. And with respect to verse 25, where it is, "was not Rahab the harlot juf-" tified by works?" fee Numb. xiv. 14; Deut. ii. 25; Josh. ii. 9-11; Heb. ix. 31; and let those answer the question.

Look for a moment, Sir, on one part of Cicero's character, "that boasted patron of human greatness," and blush at the abased state, the worse than nothing, of buman perfection; for "he was not ashamed to pub"lish to the world that he rose up in desence of Rome

"against her unnatural conspirators; not from a spirit of "patriotism, but to erect to bimself a monument of glory."
How vain! How shocking to a serious mind! But a true picture of such patriots, and of the natural man.

CHAP. XII.

An answer to Dr. Priestley's denying the dostrine of "ori"ginal sin." Shown to be insisted upon by the Lord fesus Christ and his apostles. The dostrine proved by experience, and underiable matter of fast.

WITH respect to "original sin," which you suppose " to be another cause of insidelity," I would observe thereon, that Jesus Christ positively insists upon the doctrine, St. John iii. 3,7; and I believe that no person denies original sin except the unregenerate; for the first act which any truly regenerate man does is to confess fomething like this: "Behold I am vile." Or cries out, in the diffress of his foul, " Unclean! " Unclean!"-Or, "I was conceived in fin,-"and " am altogether defiled."-" Who, or what, can make " me clean!"-And, "When I would do good, evil " is prefent with me." Therefore I am aftonished whenever I find any perfon denying the doctrine. I am of opinion that fuch men do not attend to what involuntarily passes in the secret recesses of their own hearts. If they did, furely they must acquiesce with the doctrine. But if this be not agreed to, I ask, at what what time did fin enter into the world, take possession of man's foul, and defile it, so as to give it those vile propensities which, it must be confessed, do reign in a greater or leffer degree in every person, born of a woman (one only excepted), until regenerated by the power of fovereign grace. Should you fay, judge not of others by yourself: I answer, that the prophets and apostles all plead guilty to this awful accusation, as I have shown, pages 142-148. See St. Paul's description of men in their natural state, Rom. i. 21-22; see also our Lord's account of the human heart, Mark vii. 20-23; and compare it with your own observations and experience; then deny the doctrine of "original fin," if you can: but if you should still reject the awful truth, refuse your assent thereto, and continue to plead for the dignity of man, or the excellency of human nature; for your own fake recollect that this will be accufing the holy scriptures of salsehood, or of prevarication, or both; not obliquely, or indirectly, but fully, and in earnest; for, I think, it is generally allowed that whoever denies "original fin," contends also for the dignity and excellency of our fallen corrupted nature *. If you

^{*} You cannot but have observed how difficult it is to persuade any man to do a real benefit to another; even to a person, in the estimation of multitudes, highly worthy of being regarded by his fellow men for his abilities, or, &c. Yet, except you can prevail upon the person, or persons (you wish should befriend him), to believe that he, or they, will be some way or other benefited by fo doing, it is a thousand to one if you carry your point; because fo very few men are inclined to do any good, where they have not a prospect of advantage, either in speedy possession, or certain reversion. But give (almost) any man the least personal offence, and to use the expression of a gentleman of high rank, who received only an imaginary affront some time past; after swearing, most horribly, he added, " I will follow him to hell-gates to be " revenged

you do fo, where are the proofs, Sir, of that excellency and dignity? The holy Scriptures affert the very contrary (as I have already shown); for they declare, Gen. vi. 5, that "God faw that the wickedness " of man was great in the earth, and that every imagi-" nation of the thoughts of his heart was only evil con-" tinually." Those sacred records insist upon a great deal more to the fame purport, as you may fee, Pfal. xiv. 1-4; xxxix. 5, 11; liii. 1-4; lxii. 9; Prov. vi. 14; Ifa. i. 23; xxiii. 9; lxiv. 6; Jer. xvii. 9; Matt. xv. 18, 19; Rom. i. 22-31; Gal. v. 17, 19-21; Ephef. ii. 12; Rev. xxii. 15. Can you read this very long catalogue of the dreadful abominations of the human heart, which experience confirms, and contend for the dignity and excellency of human nature? Should you ask how experience confirms that depravity? It appears fully and clearly from the necesfity, that the legislature have been under, to enact the most severe laws for the restraining the effects of the corruption of that human nature which is dignified, extolled, and rated, fo very high. Experience having taught them that there is no governing that excellent

" revenged upon him." And I am of opinion that some men would feek revenge beyond those confines, were it possible.—Tell us then. Sir, whence this detested and abominable iniquity originates; if not (as the Scriptures affert, Gen. iii. and Romans v. 12—21, ct al.) in the fall of our first parents.

Here I am aware that many gentlemen laugh at the idea of the whole human race being the offspring of Adam and Eve; for, fay they, "Did not Cain go into the land of Nod, and find other wo" men, from whom he took a wife?" Let fach spend that time to learn the Hebrew language which they waste in reading Voltaire, &c. and they may find their awful midake. If I should be spared another year, I hope to give the public a translation of that, and several other texts, with which the infidels of the present day sport themselves (it may be seared) to their eternal ruin.

creature without penal laws, not trifling, but feverely penal; even death. The frequent sessions at the Old Bailey, and the judges' repeated circuits, demonstrate this fact incontestably; and the very numerous executions, confequent thereon, render it irrefutably clear, as though written with a fun-beam. Nor are the poor and the illiterate the only persons who render themfelves obnoxious to the laws, and to the penalties those inflict; for we too frequently hear of persons in the rank of gentlemen, persons of education and real property, committing fuch offences as bring them to the gallows. Many instances of the truth of this have been manifested in our days; and a very recent one of two perfons having been executed at or near Shrewsbury, the 5th instant (Sept. 1789), for forgery; and "whose fate was scarcely lamented on account of " feveral fimilar matters appearing against them, and " not a little aggravated, when it is confidered that " Mr. —— was possessed of about 3001. a year, " landed property, beside his practice as an attorney." You know that a thief is one of the most despicable characters among men. Now, Sir, I can prove to you that even the princes of the once most highly favoured nation that the world ever knew, professing the holy religion which Jehovah had instituted, were thieves. Read Isa. i. 21-23. But perhaps you will say, Oh! the Jews are no example for the rest of mankind; they were always disobedient, rebellious, obdurate, &c. Well, but where was the nation, or who were the people, that excelled them at any period until Jehovah cast them off for rejecting his Son Jesus Christ, the true Messiah? I am satisfied that you cannot produce even one. Do you say, whatever the ancients were, the present generation of men are very different beings; becaufe because learning, philosophy, &c. has quite renewed them. Where is the nation? Who are the people? If fuch are, even in Britain, I will venture to affert that they have not been "renewed in the fpirit of their " minds," by the writings or preaching of any Socinian, on the face of the earth, nor ever will be. And it appears, from a very recent a-t of p-t, that they do not look upon any man to be proof against peculation, not only in the common general acceptation of the word, but in the very worst sense of it: and that also in a person who is unspeakably less exposed to the temptation than any other man; and who from education, rank in life, &c. &c. less to be fuspected capable of such a crime, consequently morally impossible, that he should commit so horrid an offence; yet, notwithstanding all these barriers, the legislature thought it needful to take all the means in their power to prevent the commission of it, even by him; for the clauses of that act were so cautiously and forcibly expressed as to render their meaning intelligible to every common capacity; fignifying, that without fuch an unfurmountable bulwark, there could not be a fufficient fecurity from the offence they were endeavouring to prevent*. That act fpeaks louder than thunder, supports the holy Scriptures, which declare that "The " heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately " wicked;" Jer. xvii. 9. It also consutes the idea, and grinds to dust the idol of human dignity and excellence; and, if attended to, preaches that doctrine which ^{*} I am thoroughly fatisfied, the legislature did not suppose, that the person here alluded to would have required that precaution; but the persons whom he might intrust were, in their opinion, to be guarded against, so as to prevent every possibility of fraud by them; and you know they would not be men of mean degree.

the prophet of the ever-living and only true God taught more emphatically, and to the purpose, than all the pulpits in the empire would be able to do (I fear) in a whole century.

As you have therefore fo great a cloud of competent, unbiaffed, witneffes against you, in one article of your creed, overturning a principal part of your Babel; be persuaded to think that the other parts of your belief are as brittle; and, if as fully tried as the one under consideration has been, they would all be found equally destitute of truth, and as easily broken to pieces. I mean such of them as are repugnant to the holy Scriptures.

Perhaps you may fay, Does not that Bible, which you feem to rate fo highly, often call men good, righteous, &c.? And does not fuch expressions suppose their excellency and dignity? I admit that our translators have made use of words which imply that; but, if the argument made as much against your opinion as for it, I am persuaded you would find it so erroneous as to fet afide the evidence. For instance, the word, מוכ, tob, has many fignifications beside good; and by giving it that reading, it contradicts many other Scriptures, as you know. That it will bear a different reading, and ought (whenever man is fpoken of as good) to be rendered differently, cannot juftly be denied; as in Prov. xiv. 14, you may fee how many words are fupplied in the translation to make that verse. Also the word righteous, when speaking of man, requires to be read justified, as in Psal. xxxiii. 1, xcvii. 12, and many others; because the Hebrew word is , in the conjug. hiphil, one made righteous, i. e. justified. The prophet Micah (according to our translation) says, vii. 2, "The good man is perished

" out of the earth;" but the margin reads very properly, "the godly or merciful;" and many other paffages also require some such alteration. Perhaps you will rejoin, does not Christ say, Matt. xii. 35, " A " good man out of the good treasure of the heart bring-"eth forth good things." Also Matt. xx. 11; xxiv. 43; Mark xiv. 14; Luke xii. 39; Persons are called " good." I reply, the translation of the first contradicts Gen. vi. 5; Pfal. xiv. 1-3; Jer. xvii. 9; and other texts; therefore demands a different translation; and, bleffed be God, the holy Scriptures are never difcordant, or incongruous, where a due attention is given to the facred original.—The word translated good is in the Greek ayalos, and is often justly rendered good; but it has also other acceptations, as non has in Hebrew, beside merciful. Dr. William Robertson, in his "Thefaurus Græcæ," gives that word fix meanings, viz. "bonus, prudens, fortis, dives, excellens, uti-"lis;" and the Rev. Mr. Parkhurst, M. A. shews, in his valuable Lexicon, that where it is translated good in feveral texts, its meaning is "bountiful, kind, bene-"volent, merciful, profitable, useful," &c. I humbly fuppose then, Sir, that we may render this verse, Matt. xii. 35 (without the least injustice to the facred original), A merciful man, out of the benevolent treafure of the heart (εκβαλλει), fendeth forth profitable words (for "things" are not in the original), but a wicked man out of that wicked treasury sendeth forth iniquity; Luke vi. 45, "For of the abundance of the " heart the mouth speaketh." In all the other four texts, where it is rendered "good man," it ought to have been translated ruler, or father, of the family; and Luke xxiv. 50, last clause, should be read, He (Joseph) was a benevolent man, and justified; Luke i. 6, Zacharias and Elizabeth were both justified before God; Acts xi. 24, Barnabas was a good man, and no wonder, for "he was full of the Holy Ghost, and of faith."

Perhaps you will go further and fay, that the Scriptures not only speak of man as good, but also as perfect; and mention Job as a perfect man. The word in fignifies "integrity, sincerity, completeness," as well as perfection; therefore the first verse of that book should be read (to accord with other Scriptures), Job was fincere and upright; for, in chap. xxv. ver. 4, we find, "How can he be clean that is born of a " woman?" And we know, from his own confession, that he was very far from perfection; for, in chap xlii. 6, he fays, "I abhor myfelf, and repent in dust and " afhes." Perfection needs no repentance; Luke vi. "one that is fully instructed." I Cor. ii. 6, For we speak wisdom "to the adult," yet not the wisdom, "&c. Also Phil. iii. 15 ought to be read, Therefore as many as are adults should be thus minded; for the common reading is exceedingly erroneous; because the apostle to the Hebrews says, chap. vii. 19, "The "law made no one perfect." But does not St. Paul say, 2 Cor. xiii. 11, "Brethren, sarewell, be ye per-" fect." The word καταρτίζεσθε is 2d pers. plur. pres. imper. passive: Be ye renewed, or united. Or, if it must be perfected, it should be observed, that they do not perfect themselves; the original word is passive, therefore it is to be done by another.—Leigh's supplement says, "The proper original sense of the word is to compact, or knit together, either members in a "body, or parts in a building." Should you say, why then is perfection fo frequently mentioned; especially Colos. iv. 12, last clause, "That ye may stand or perfect

e perfect and complete in all the will of God?" I anfwer, that weadapowers is a part. pret. paff. nom. plur. from πληςοω; therefore should be read, That ye may stand complete, having been perfetted in all the will of God. How? They had the holy Gospel preached unto them, fo as that they were " filled with the know-" ledge of his will, in all wifdom and spiritual under-"flanding;" Colof. i. 9. Whereby "their hearts had been united in love, and unto all riches of the " full affurance of understanding," in the knowledge " of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of " Christ;" Colos. ii. 12. Should you ask, is there no perfection? Yes, there is a bleffed perfection, but it is not in ourselves. Where then? Hear the apostle, " By one offering he (Christ) hath perfected for ever " them that are fanctified;" Heb. x. 14. Compare verse 10. "Christ in you the hope of glory;" Colos. i. 27. And ye are complete in him; Colof. ii. 10. Who is our righteoufness; I Cor. i. 30; 2 Cor. v. 21. And our life; Colof. iii. 4. "Whom we preach" (rather loudly celebrate, καταίγελλομεν), " warning every man, " and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may " present every man persect in Christ Jesus;" Colos, i. 28. This is the perfection spoken of throughout the whole facred Scriptures; not inherent holinefs, or perfection, which was never found in any mere man fince Adam fell; not acquired holinefs, which no perfon ever attained, except the God-man Christ Jesus; but an imputed perfection, "through faith in him, who is our righteousness and our life." May you and I partake of it in life, be found in it in death, and we shall be clothed with it through the countless ages of eternity; for it is not the righteoufness of a man, or of O_3

the highest angelic being, but the righteousness of the great, the glorious, omnipotent, holy, God. Sec 2 Cor. v. 21.

CHAP. XIII.

Dr. Priestley's affertion, that "The doctrine of the plenary" inspiration of the Scriptures is a great cause of inside"lity," is shown to be an affertion destitute of sufficient evidence; and as sull testimony, as is requisite to establish any sact, is given to prove that all the canonical books of the sacred Scriptures are of divine inspiration.

BUT yoù further affert (as I have quoted, p. 181), "What has perhaps been as great a cause of infidelity, as any other, is the doctrine of the plenary infpiration of the Scriptures,"

This affertion faps the very foundation of the Chriftian religion, and endeavours to bring mankind into that miferable state of darkness and ignorance wherein they were enveloped prior to the publication of the blessed gospel of Jesus Christ. And what end is to be answered by it? I can see no other than an attempt to degrade the Saviour of men to the abject state of ourselves, in order to promote a soul-ruining, Goddishonouring, notion; such an one as is not to be found, even in hell. Those miserable spirits are constrained to acknowledge, "We know thee, who thou art, the holy one of God;" Luke iv. 34. But men, under the gloss of philosophy, pretend to be "wise "above"

above what is written," and despise "the wisdom of "God." Surely St. Paul's exhortation was never more needful to be inculcated than in the present day: "Beware, lest any man spoil you through phi-"losophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after "Christ;" Colos. ii. 8. But, as if the apostle had said, in spite of all that such poor worms can effect, "In him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the God-"head bodily;" Ver. 9. Whoever consults Deut. viii. 3; Matt. iv. 4; Luke iv. 4; I Cor. ii. 13; 2 Tim. iii. 15—17, will find as many evidences of the reality of the divine inspiration of the holy Scriptures.—I consess that I once had my doubts respecting the inspiration of the book of Job, but looking at I Cor. iii. 19, I found that the apostle Paul says, "For "it is written, He taketh the wise in his own crastifuses." And the passage he there quotes is only to " nefs." And the passage he there quotes is only to be found, Job v. 13, which affords that great apostle's testimony, that the said book is of divine inspiration. And, if we examine the twelfth chapter of the Romans attentively, we shall find that it contains more excellent moral precepts, in its paucity, than all that the heathen ever wrote; except what they learned from the facred Scriptures, which the Jews might lend them.—Also the apostle James says, chap. v. 11, "Ye have heard of the patience of Job." But, as I have known fome perfons (not averse to the holy Scriptures) who esteem the book of Job only as a kind of sacred drama, not an inspired book, I would wish such persons to lay a map of the world before them, and observe how accurately that book delineates what, by the late Capt. Cook's researches, has been found true, contrary to the fixed opinion of the philosophers of our day, until Cook's voyages were completed; namely, "He stretcheth out the north over the empty "place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing." (Or the last clause I humbly suppose may be read) "He "suspends the earth between the light and spirit, or gross air." See Job xxvi. 7.

But I will contrast your affertion by those of two inspired apostles. "St. Paul, exhibiting something of the grand design of the holy Scriptures, and display-" ing their fublime origin, enumerates a few of the " gracious purposes that they are intended to serve." " All Scripture (fays he) is given by inspiration of "God, and is profitable for doctrine"—to declare and establish religious truths; "for reproof"-to convince of fin, and refute error; " for correction" (προς επανορθωσιν), or renovation of the heart, and reformation of life; "for instruction in the righteousness," in that righteousness which never could have been learned from any other book, and in which alone finful men may appear with comfort before their God." Hervey. Because it is called "The righteousness of God," Ifa. liv. 17; 2 Cor. v. 21. Compare Ifa. xlvi. 13; Jer. xxiii. 6. To this we have the testimony of the apostle Peter, 2 Epist. i. 20, 21, "Knowing this first, "that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private "interpretation. Ver. 21, For the prophecy came " not in old time (margin, at any time) by the will of " man; but holy men of God spake as they were " moved by the Holy Ghost." These, while they incontestably prove the divinity of the Holy Spirit, prove also that Dr. Priestley's affertion has no foundation but in the heads of unbelievers of God's holy word. 3 word *. And it may be asked, if the whole sacred canonical books are not as those two apostles declare, " of the infpiration of God," how came we by them? And why could not all the united wifdom of the ancient philosophers discover the unutterable excellences which those invaluable books contain? For it may be eafily shown that they were wifer in many things, respecting science, than the men of this generation, as I hope irrefutably to prove in a few months, if spared, and nothing unforeseen hinder. The reason is obvious; because they were not honoured with the fame divine infpiration. Also, if the contents of those books are not really and truly from God, what becomes of the integrity and fincerity of all the pious reformers, and of the honour and veracity of all the bishops and other dignified clergy, &c. &c. fince the Reformation? Are they all deceivers? God forbid! Rather let the infamy rest upon Julian the apostate, Socinus, and their supporters, than upon men whose lives were highly honourable to their facred profession, and some of them sealed their most holy faith with their blood; and who, I am fatisfied, would have fuffered a thousand deaths (had it been possible) rather than have given up the precious truths which those facred books contain; knowing well that they are like an exquisitely fine wrought golden chain, not a fingle link of which ought to be separated from the rest, because they sweetly harmonize; and "therein

^{*} There is a text in Ecclefiastes (a Book which is as lightly esteemed by many as any of the canonical books), yet it contains such a proof of its divine original, as the experience of every observing person confirms. Ecclest v. 10, "He that loveth filver, shall not be satisfied with filver; nor he that loveth abundance, with increase."

" is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith;" Rom. i. 17.

Here I would ask you, Sir, if you can possibly think it reasonable that any man, or set of men, who truly feared God, would have dared to have introduced their prophecies, or any other parts of their facred embassies, with, "Thus faith the Lord," except they had been really inspired of, or by, Jehovah? You know that God reproved fuch openly, as dared to fay that their message was from the Lord, when he had not fent them.—Also dared the apostle Paul, in all his epiftles, to have introduced them with "grace and peace " from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ," if he had not wrote by inspiration? Or would the apostle Peter have introduced his epiftles with the three divine names, and with that earnest supplication, "grace and " peace be multiplied unto you," had not the God of peace indited his invaluable writings? Read the fecond chapter of his first epistle from verse 1-10, and then fay if ever you read aught superior to it for elegance, dignity, and fublimity, though he was only a poor illiterate fisherman. Must not he, indisputably, have been taught of God? And it must be allowed that none of those Scriptures could have been wrote by men who did not fear God, for their contents are spiritual and holy, and diametrically opposite to the fentiments of ungodly men; who in general hate and contemn those facred books, because "they oppose " their prejudices, criminate their passions, and con-" demn their conduct;" from all which it is clearly manifest that the holy Scriptures, as contained in the canonical books of the Old and New Testaments, are of the inspiration of the God of infinite wisdom, holiness, grace, and truth; for the wisdom of God is so wonderfully wonderfully and gloriously displayed therein as to render it indisputably manifest, that he mercifully and graciously condescended to dictate their invaluable contents *. Therefore I will not suppose that any man will

* Sceptics ask, "How came the book of Esther in the canon of the " Scriptures, feeing that God's name is not once mentioned therein; or is the names Jehovah or Lord to be found there?"-Such persons manifest a very awful enmity to the holy Scriptures; otherwife, before they make fuch filly, frivolous, objections, they would confider that when any man is banished from the country (of which he is a natural born subject) for transgressing against any of her laws, he is not under the protection of her government, confequently can have no pretentions to the favour of her king, unless that prince should voluntarily extend his clemency to him. Such was the case of the descendants of Israel at the time which the book of Either refers to; they were separated from the ordinances of God, and under a very fevere chastifement that he had brought upon them, on account of their idolatry, and other crying fins, which constrained him (if I may thus express myself) so to hide his face from them, that it feemed as if he had entirely cast them off. " Nevertheless his loving kindness did he not utterly take " from them, nor fuffer his faithfulness to fail;" Pfal. lxxxix. But in the midst of righteous judgment he remembered everlastingly righteous mercy. Therefore, though he suffered not his holy, glorious, name to be mentioned therein, he kept them from the destruction that threatened them, and overthrew their enemies, by a very marvellous overthrow; whereby he has left a merciful and gracious affurance to his people, in after ages, that "whofo touch-" eth them, toucheth the apple of God's eye;" Zech. ii. 8. And Jehovah has therein fully manifested, that " those who walk in " pride he will," fooner or latter, "abase;" Dan. iv. 37. I know not of any inflance, in facred or profane hiftory, where an exalted proud man was fo ignominiously abased, nor so speedily cut off by fo fcandalous a death, as Haman. Were not those two Scriptures therefore literally fulfilled, and in a manner which strikingly points out the faithfulness of God to his word? And it should not be forgot that Jehovah foretold, by his prophet Ifaiah, the name of the prince by whom he would deliver them from their captivity, and the manner how that should be effected, more than two hundred will admit of Dr. Priestley's bare affertion (especially as he does not attempt to give sufficient proof in support of it) to be taken in preference to the written declaration of two inspired apostles, champions and martyrs, who wrought many miracles, and, after having been the happy instruments of turning multitudes " from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan " unto God," fealed the bleffed truths they had promulged with their own blood; "not accounting their " lives dear unto themselves, so that they might finish " their course with joy, and the ministry which they " received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of " the grace of God;" Acts xx. 24. This is St. Luke's testimony of these apostles' labours being of the inspiration of God. And St. Paul further declares, "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was " preached of me is not after man; for I neither re-" ceived it of man, neither was I taught it, but by " the revelation of Jesus Christ;" Gal. i. 11, 12. Again, "Ye have heard of the difpensation of the er grace of God which is given me to you-ward; how, " that by revelation, he made known unto me the mystery years before it came to pass; and that prophecy is confirmed, not only by the testimony of Jews, but also by the best heathen historians, as Herodotus and Xenophon. From all which we may fasely conclude, that the book of Essher is clearly marked with divine authority; for had any wisdom, short of Omniscience, distated its contents, I am of opinion, that so needful an omission as that which the insidel censures, would not have been found therein; but, most probably, the divine names would have been repeated and reiterated times without number, and with so much tautology, as to have clearly manifested the deception.

2-5. What does St. Peter fay? "We have not fol-" lowed cunningly devifed fables, when we made "known unto you the power and coming of our " Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his " majesty;" 2 Pet. i. 16. (Confult the five following verses *.) But I forbear to infult the reader's feelings and understanding by supposing that any, even the least, intelligent person, will hesitate a moment to condemn fuch an affertion as Dr. Prieftley's, and to pity me, was I to imagine, that his doctrines (after what has been advanced) deferve any attention, except fuch as is fometimes given to libels, at the Royal Exchange. For if a libel, not only against the king, but against any one of his ministers, be justly treated with the utmost contempt and ignominy, what ought to be the fate of a most impious libel against the King of kings, the Prince of life, and Lord of glory? (See Acts iii. 15; 1 Cor. ii. 8; Rev. xix. 16.) The reader will easily determine with respect to the libel itself; and, as to the authors of fuch libels, it is to be feared that they are in the ftate represented by St. Paul; 2 Thef. ii. 10-12.

Beside the spiritual injury that must unavoidably arise from that affertion, it exposes individuals to irreparable losses. I mean that if "the plenary inspira-

^{* &}quot;Porphryus, a philosopher, and a professed enemy of the Christian religion, endeavoured to find out how the prophet Daniel could so exactly foretel the wonderful events which came to pass perfectly agreeable to his prediction; but, having sought along time ineffectually for a consustation of them, he endeavoured to persuade himself and his followers, that those events Daniel prophesied of were wrote after they fell out, and were rather a narration of facts already past, than a prediction of events to come." Rollin's Ancient History.

" tion of the holy Scriptures" be permitted to be for discredited, as Dr. Priestley and his adherents would have them to be (for the fake of supporting their opinions), individuals can have no covenants but what are liable to be evaded, and the most upright judge may not have it in his power to administer justice so strictly as he might wish; because witnesses perhaps may be fubpæna'd, or fuborned, who difcredit "the plenary " infpiration of the Scriptures," upon Dr. Prieftley's authority; and not knowing how to distinguish which the Doctor supposes are inspired, and which are not, it may be with them eafily concluded that none of them are the inspired word of God, and therefore in no degree binding upon their conscience; for take away this influential umpire in man, and experience has shewn what iniquity he is capable of; for if it "leads " to infidelity," it cannot be one of the great truths of the Christian religion. Nor is this a chimera; for it is well known that some of the Jews are indifferent about what they fay in a court, except they be fworn upon the Hebrew Pentateuch. And I have reason to believe that some of the Roman Catholics do not confider an oath fo folemn or binding upon the confcience, if fworn upon a Bible only, as if a crucifix was kiffed *.

^{*} It just now strikes me to observe; that although the contents of the facred Scriptures are accommodated to the lowest capacities, and suited to strike the least intelligent reader, yet there is such a loftiness and dignity run through the whole tenor of shose inestimable volumes, as that the productions of the most esteemed writers (whose ideas are merely human) are not worthy to be mentioned when set in competition therewith. Read the writings of the most admired authors in divinity; though we may be charmed with their ideas, entertained with their subject, and delighted with the subli-

Should any one fay you are writing at random, and blaming where you ought not; for does not the apostle Paul fay, concerning the five (first) verses of his seventh chapter of the 1st Corinthians, "I speak this by per-" mission, and not of commandment?" Yes: and to the fame purport in the 12th verse; also 2 Cor. vii. 8; xi. 17. But those are so far from leading us to conclude that any other part of his writings are not inspired, that they are a strong confirmation to the contrary. That apostle also says, 1 Cor. xiv. 37, "If " any man think himfelf to be a prophet, or spiritual, " let him acknowledge what I write unto you, that " they are the commandments of the Lord." (See the original.) And the apostle Peter holds the whole ancient facred Scriptures in fo very high estimation, that he gives more credit to their contents than to what he himself was an eye-witness of; as you may see by reading 2 Pet i. 16-21: and by comparing Luke i. 70; Acts ii. 17; Rom. xii. 6; 2 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. i. 11, you will find how highly those fanctified apostles, &c. esteemed the divine records as the true word of the ever-living and unchangeable God. But suppose for a moment that the apostle Paul had not been inspired, we know that he was converted by the Lord Jesus Christ's appearing to him. (See Acts ix. 3-22; xxii. 6-21; xxvi. 12-20.) And that "he was caught " up to the third heaven, and paradife;" where "he " heard unspeakable words," such as were not possible " for a man to utter;" 2 Cor. xii. 2-4. And he fomity of their expressions, yet, when they quote any portion of holy writ, how flat do their sentiments appear. They seem to lose their beauty; their elegance immediately dwindles, and their lustre diminishes, as would the moon's pale brightness in the sun's meridian esfulgence.

Iemnly declares (as already observed), Gal. i. 11, 12, That "the gospel which he preached, he was not "taught of man but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."—Now all this must be disproved, or else his testimony is valid, and must be credited; and therefore, suppose that there should be any part, not immediately inspired of God (which I by no means allow, except where he himself notes it), he, surely, with all those advantages, was inexpressibly more capable of preaching, or writing, agreeably to the mind of God, than Dr. Priessely, or any other man; therefore no Christian can possibly agree with your doctrines, except such as are not assaid to "pervert the truth of the word of the "living God, even of the Lord of Hosts our God." Jer. xxiii. 36.

The book of the prophet Hofea is another of those portions of divine inspiration which neither Sceptics nor Socinians, nor any other self-righteous persons, can readily assent to, because of part of the contents of the first and third chapters; but the 4th verse of chap. iii. and the last verse of chapter ix. so clearly demonstrate what our eyes behold in this our day, as to render the divine inspiration of that prophecy certain; for Israel and Judah (excepting their idolatry) were in an enviable state, rather than otherwise, at the time Hosea wrote, as may be seen by consulting their history during the reign of the kings he mentions, which were the times wherein he wrote that prophecy. And whoever is incredulous respecting the prophecy of Joel being of divine inspiration, may have his doubts resolved by reading the second chapter, and comparing it with the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. In short, all the books of the prophets are so clearly stamped with the divine inspiration, as that "he who "runs"

runs may read," and clearly perceive it, unless his eyes are veiled by the god of this world.

The Book of Revelation is perhaps as lightly esteemed, by the men of the world, as any part of the facred Scriptures; but even there, among the holy mysteries it contains, are such sublime beauties, such dignity and grandeur, in some of the intelligible descriptions that it gives, as cannot fail to entertain the mind while they edify the heart, and manifest their divine authority. Out of those I would only produce one, as given us in the tenth chapter, from 1st—6th verse, that you may read at your leisure; and "which, " abstracted from its soiritual meaning, and considered " abstracted from its spiritual meaning, and considered only as a stately piece of machinery, well deserves our attention; and I will venture to say has not its " fuperior, perhaps not its equal, in any of the most " celebrated masters of Greece and Rome.-All that " is gloomy or beautiful in the atmosphere, all that is "ftriking or magnificent in every element, is taken to heighten the idea; yet nothing is disproportionate but an uniform air of inestable majesty greatens, examples, ennobles, the whole.—Observe the aspect of " this august personage. All the brightness of the " fun fhines in his countenance, and all the rage of " the fire burns in his feet.—See his apparel. The " clouds compose his robe, and the drapery of the sky " floats upon his shoulders. The rainbow forms his " diadem; and that which compasseth the heaven with a glorious circle is the ornament of his head. Be" hold his attitude. One foot stands on the ocean, the " other rests on the land. The wide extended earth, and the world of waters, serve as pedestals for those " mighty columns,-Confider the action. His hand

" is lifted up to the height of the stars. He speaks; " and the regions of the firmament echo with his " mighty accents, as the midnight-defert refounds « with the lion's roar. The artillery of the skies is " discharged at the signal; a peal of seven-fold thun-" ders fpreads the alarm, and prepares the universe " to receive his orders.-To finish all, and give the " highest grandear, as well as the utmost folemnity, " to the reprefentation, hear the decree that iffues " from his mouth. He swears by HIM that liveth " for ever and ever.-In whatever manner fo maor jestic a person had expressed himself, he could not " fail of commanding universal attention; but when " he confirms his fpeech by a most facred and invio-" lable oath, we are not only wrapt in filent fuspente, " but overwhelmed with the profoundest awe.-He " swears, That time shall be no longer. Was ever "voice fo full of terror; fo big with wonder? It " proclaims, not the fall of empires, but the final " period of things. It strikes off the wheels of na-"ture; bids ages and generations cease to roll; and, " with one potent word, configns a whole world over 66 to diffolution.—This is one, among a multitude of " very fublime and mafterly ftrokes, to be found in " that too much neglected book—the Bible."—Hervey's Contemplation on the Nights.

Had the elegant pen of that great Master, in our Israel, been employed to elucidate the Book of Canticles, and some other parts of the Holy Bible, which the infidels make a mock at; I am of opinion that the revilers of those facred pages must have been silenced, if not consounded.

Thus, Sir, I humbly hope that I have given unfpeakably speakably better evidence of the plenary inspiration of the holy Scriptures than you (or any other person) have brought, or can bring, to the contrary.

And, as I have found fo much fault with your avowed principles of religion, you may defire to know what mine are. If these sheets do not sufficiently express them, though I hope they do, I will give them as follows.

To be reconciled to the omnipotent God," through faith, in the perfect obedience and death of his dear Son;—" to be interested in the unsearchable " riches of Christ," who hath satisfied the divine justice, magnified the divine law, and made both unspeakably honourable, that finners might be justified and accepted before him who is infinitely holy;—" to be renewed " in our hearts, and influenced in our lives, by the " fanctifying operations of the divine Stirit; this is " evangelical righteoufness; this is genuine religion; " this is the kingdom of God established in the foul.— " How benign and inviting is fuch an inflitution! " How honourable and advantageous fuch a state! " And from such privileges, what other effects can " flow but that peace, which passeth all understanding? "that joy which is unspeakable and glorious?"-Hervey.

Now, Sir, allow me to exhort you feriously to reflect, whether you have not done "despite to "the Spirit of grace," by denying the glorious blessed truths, which be has condescended to reveal, and contemning the precious holy doctrines that he has been graciously pleased to set forth, to teach, and to inculcate; for, be assured that, if you should be honoured with any consolations in death;—any, even the least, foretaste of the blessedness of the saints in light;—it must come to you through the instrumentality of the Word, and be brought to your conscience by the almighty power of that "Spirit of grace," whose truths you reject, and whose gracious influence you lightly esteem.—Should you not acknowledge this to be the case, but are determined to amuse yourself with the toys, the baubles, the nihility of your performances, to justify you before the God of spotless purity, I would, in pity to your deplorable state, beg leave to ask,

Will toys amuse, when med'cines cannot cure?
When spirits ebb, when life's enchanting scenes
Their pleasures lose,——
Will toys amuse?—No: thrones will then be toys,
And earth and skies seem dust upon the scale.

Young's Night Thoughts. Complaint I.

CHAP. XIV.

Proves the personality and divinity of the Holy Ghost.

But there is another divine Person in the adorable Godhead whom true Christians have holy communion and sellowship with (see 2 Cor. xiii. 14; Philip. ii. 1; and compare 1 John i. 3), revealed in the holy Scriptures, under the name of the Holy Spirit, Psal. li. 11; Isa. lxiii. 10, 11; Luke xi. 13; Ephes. i. 13; iv. 30; 1 Thess. iv. 8: and also of the Holy Ghost in at least ninety texts of the New Testament; and who is frequently spoken of as a separate Person from the Father and the Son; who has the glorious divine names Aleim, Jehovah, and Adoni, given bim in the Old Testament;—is repeatedly called God in the New Testament, Testament, where all the perfections of Deity are ascribed to him, the works of God are performed by him, the difpensations of grace are committed to him; in "the everlasting covenant," fee Rom. v. 5, miraculous operations are performed through his omnipotence, fuch as the gift of tongues, &c. and all true Christians are sanctified by him, as you may see I Cor. vi. 11; 2 Theff. ii. 13; 1 Pet. i. 2: each of which I shall prove under their distinct heads; though you have faid in your letters to a philosophical unbeliever, Vol. I. p. 244, "An act of King William makes it " blasphemy, punishable by confiscation of goods, " and, if perfifted in, imprisonment for life, either to " deny that any of the Three Persons, the Father, " Son, or Holy Spirit, is God; or to maintain that " there are more Gods than onc." 'Of these three, I have not fcrupled, on many occasions, to deny the divinity of one, and the separate existence of anoc ther.

As your negation of these great and inestimably valuable truths is but that of a fallible mortal fetting up his finite understanding in opposition to the infinite wifdom of him who is omniscient, even bim "who hath " measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and " meted out heaven with a fpan, and comprehended " the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the " mountains in fcales, and the hills in a balance," Ifa. xl. 12; who are you, before that great "Zerubbabel?" Will not you be "counted less than nothing?" more impotent, and your doctrines more to be contemned and dreaded than the most noxious vermin is by the most delicate person, "that cannot adventure to set the " fole of her foot upon the ground for delicacy and " tenderness?" Deut. xxviii. 56. Oh! take care, Sir, P 3 how how you any longer "do despite to the Spirit of "grace;" for, be assured, he is to all impenitent sinners "a consuming fire." See Exod. xxiv. 17; Deut. iv. 24; ix. 3; Heb. xii. 29.

But I have faid that this divine Person, "the Holy "Spirit," has the names Aleim, Jehovah, and Adoni, given him in the Old Testament; I now proceed to prove my affertion.

I pass over Gen. i. 2, to avoid controversy, and bring you to Gen. xli. 38, where he is called "אלהים " רווי," the Spirit Aleim; also in Exod. xxxi. 3; xxxv. 31. In these his operations are declared as the giver of wifdom, understanding, and knowledge: but in Numb. xxiv. 2; 1Sam. x. 10; xi. 6; xix. 20, 23; 2 Chron. xv. 1; his personality and office as the Spirit of prophecy is declared; and it is expressly faid in all those texts, "the Spirit Aleim came upon him." But in Job xxxiii. 4, the work of creation is afcribed to him. Not the creation of an inanimate thing; not the creation of a brute; but the creation of a rational creature, of a man, body and spirit; for, says Job, God the Spirit hath made me. Alfo, Pfalm civ. where the royal pfalmift is enumerating the harmony, utility, and beauty, of the visible creation, he savs, ver. 24, "O " Jehovah, how manifold are thy works! in wifdom " haft theu made them all." Ver. 29, "Thou hideft " thy face, they are troubled; thou takeft away their " breath, they die, and return to their dust. Ver. 30, "Thou fendest forth thy Spirit, they are created; and "thou renewest the face of the earth." From which we may conclude with Mr. Burkitt, "that every mo-" ment's prefervation is virtually a new creation." And it feems, from Pfal. civ. 30, that the Holy Spirit is the omnipotent Being who effects the wonderful work; and and if we compare Gen. ii. 7, and Job xxxiii. 4, we find he is "Jehovah Aleim." Thus it appears that in nine places of the Old Testament the Holy Spirit is called Aleim.

He is also called Jehovah in at least nineteen different texts in the Old Testament; and in Judg. iii. 10; ו Sam. xvi. 13, רוח־יהוה are joined by maccaph. I Kin. xxii. 24, "Zedekiah the fon of Chennanah went " near and fmote Micaiah on the cheek," and faid, " Which way went רחזיהוה, the Spirit Jehovah, " from me to speak unto thee?" 2 Chron. xviii. 23, is exactly the fame; 2 Sam. xxiii. 2, רוח יהוה, " The " Spirit Jehovah spake by me." Ver. 3, " The God " of Ifrael faid." Here the Holy Spirit is called Lord and God: Ezek. xi. 5, "The Spirit of Jehovah fell " upon me." But there is a most remarkable passage in Ifa. lxi. 1, where he is called by a compound name, never ascribed to any but to him, who is from everlafting to everlafting "God over all bleffed for ever-" more." " The Spirit of the Lord God is upon " me." But the Hebrew is, The Spirit Adoni Jehovah is upon me. Compare Pfal. Ixviii. 20, where it is faid, "Our God is the God of falvation, and unto " Jehovah Adoni belong the iffues from death." That he is one of the divine Persons who is spoken of Isa. vi. under the character of the Lord of Hofts, and a speaker in the 8th verse of that chapter, under the name Adoni, is incontrovertibly certain; for the prophet fays, ver. 8, " Also I heard the voice of (Adoni) the Lord, saying, " Whom shall I fend, and who will go for US?" Then he gives the prophet a commanding meffage, ver. 9, 10, which St. Paul (in Acts xxviii. 25) expressly fays, " was fpoken by the Holy Ghost." And the prophet Micah P 4

Micah ascribes Personality and Omnipotence to him, chap. ii. 7, where he calls him the Spirit Jebovah.

Having found so great a number of faithful, irrefutable, evidences in the facred canon of the Old Testament, who consute your presumptuous negation; and, though they were prophets, they did not foresee such an argument as this would arise from their writings; therefore they could only declare the great truths they were commanded to publish; and having done so, they less the event with him who inspired them. I therefore proceed to examine the evidence of the New Testament, where I shall find "a cloud of witnesses," such as earth nor hell are not able to resist; much less any single mortal, though known by the titles of LL. D. F.R.S. "et multiplicato sono."

As the evangelist Luke has given the fullest account of the miraculous conception of "the holy child Jesus," I shall begin with that. An angel is sent to a virgin of the name of Mary, to acquaint her that the prophecy of Isa. vii. 14; Jer. xxxi. 22; Dan. vii. 13, 14; Mic. iv. 7; should be sulfilled in her; but, she knowing the moral impossibility of his words being accomplished in the natural way of generation, she asks, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" "And the angel answered, and said unto her, "The Holy Ghoss" shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highess shall overshadow thee; therefore also "το γευνώμενον " ὰγιον," that holy production "shall be called the "Son of God;" Luke i. 35. St. Matthew accords with this, chap. i. 20, "Joseph, thou son of David, "fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wise; for that "which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghoss." Ver. 21, "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou fhalt call his name Jesus," the Saviour. Ver. 23, "They shall call his name Emmanuel;" that is, "God "with us." Here the holy child, produced by the power of the Holy Ghost, is "called the Son of God," and " Jesus," the Saviour from sin; also, "Emmanuel,"

God in our nature." If all these do not expressly declare the personality and divinity of the Holy Ghost, I am at a loss to know what those sentences mean. (Compare 2 Tim. iii. 16, with 2 Pet. i. 21.) Luke ii. 26, "It was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghoft." xii. 12, "The Holy Ghost shall teach you what ye ought "to fay." Also Mark xii. 36, "For David himself "spake by the Holy Ghost." And though the Arians, &c. make a pretext that the Father is the only object of worship, and take John iv. 23, 24, to prove their affertion; yet I have already shewn that the apostles worshipped Christ; and here I think the Arians have no room to boaft, when the original is read without interpolations, and all the words have their full fignification. In the last clause of the 24th verse, the conjunctive particle xai is omitted in the translation. And as the word ζητεί, rendered "feeketh," implies fome defect in the Father's omniscience, some other meaning should be given it; and another reading of it may be justly given, as it is 3d perf. sing. indic. from ZHTE Ω , which signifies to require as well as to seek; and Пробиливитаς is a participle pref. accu. plur. I humbly suppose therefore that this clause should be read, And truly the Father requireth such worshipping of him. Though action is the accus. sing. following two accus. it requires to be read as a genitive, and with more propriety than that, "τοις προςκυσοῦντας," should be read " to worship." And in verse 24 our translation interpolates two words, as the italics shew. But read it without those, as I humbly suppose it ought to be, and we have a proof that the Holy Spirit is an object of worship with the Father. Also the worshippers of God the Spirit must worship him in spirit and truth. And I think myself authorised to read it thus, when I confider 2 Cor. iii. 17, 18, with the marginal reading of ver. 18, which is the true one. See also p. 222, of this tract, where I have shewn from good authority the true reading of Phil. iii. 3, which accords with the translation that I have given, John iv. 24. But if this reading of verse 24 should not be allowed me, and that we must bring in the auxiliary verb is, it should be read thus, The Spirit (is) God, and those worshipping him must worship him in spirit and truth. Should you object, Acts ii. 17, "It "shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will "pour out my Spirit," &c. please to remember that the apostle was preaching in the Hebrew tongue; and therefore indubitably spake the very words of Joel ii. 28 (or iii. 1), with the addition of ממר הואלוזים (as in 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, et al. for), "faith God." And it is Jehovah who is fpeaking; as you may see, Joel ii. 12. Therefore it was a promife, correspondent with the everlafting covenant, in which the Holy Ghost was a party. But, to avoid prolixity as much as possible, I come to Acts v. where, in verse 3, "Peter said, An"nanias, why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the "Hely Ghoft?" Ver. 4, "Thou hast not lied unto " men, ἀλλα τω Θεῶ, but unto God." Can there be a ftronger proof of the personality and divinity of that gracious Being? Surely any stronger proofs cannot reasonably be desired.

But as I know, from some experience, that Arians and Socinians in general are tolerable good disputants concerning concerning their heretical opinions, and some of them will turn and twist every argument that makes against them,; and where argument, sounded on error, cannot prevail, such endeavour to give the original text a meaning that it will not admit of; as, for instance, Dr. Priestley's reading of Phil. ii. 6. For which, see p. 95; therefore I proceed to multiply proofs, to leave no further room for such cavilling as leads to the "do-" ing despite to the Spirit of grace."

Acts v. 30-32. The Aleim of our fathers raifed up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Verse 31, Him hath the Aleim exalted (77, dezia autou) to his right hand (literally to the right hand of him), "a " Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to " Ifrael, and remission of fins." Ver. 32, "And we " are his witneffes of these things; and so is also the " Holy Ghoft." Chap. xi. 12, "The Spirit bade " me go with them, nothing doubting." Ver. 17, " What was I, that I could withftand God ?" Chap. xiii. 2, " As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, " the Holy Ghoft faid, Separate in truth (or by all " means), for me, both Barnabas and Saul for the " work whereunto I have called them." (See the orinal.) Ver. 4, "So they being fent forth by the Holy "Ghoft," ver. 5, "preached the word of God." Chap. xvi. 6, "Now when they had gone throughout Phry-" gia, and the region of Galatia, they were forbidden " of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia." Chap. xx. 23, "The Holy Ghost witnesseth in every ^{} Whoever reads the xith chapter of the Acts, and compares it with Rom. xv. 13, 16, 19, 30, must either perceive that the Hely Ghost is a divine person in the Godhead, distinct from the persons of the Father and of the Son, or (I should suppose) he does not understand what he reads.

"city, faying, That bonds and afflictions await me."
Ver. 28, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and
"to all the flock over whom the Holy Ghost hath
"made you overseers." Chap. xxi. 11, "Thus faith
"the Holy Ghost." Chap. xxviii. 25, "The Holy Ghost spake by Esaias the prophet." Rom. v. 5,
"The love of God is shed abroad in your hearts by "the Holy Ghost." Chap. xiv. 17, "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Chap. xv. 13,
"Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace." "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost." Is it possible to read all thefe, and still persist in rejecting the personality and divinity of the Holy Ghost? Awful depravity! 1 Cor. iii. 16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, "and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" Ver. 17, "The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." Chap. vi. 19, "What, know ye not that " your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" 2 Cor. vi. 16, "For ye are the temple of the living God, as "God hath faid, I will dwell in them, and walk in "them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." Compare Acts iv. 24, 25, with Acts i. 16, and 2 Pet. i. 21.

The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews ascribes the direction of all the Jewish dispensation to the Holy Ghost. See chap. ix. 8. But Moses declares that Jehovah was the director of that dispensation. You must therefore prove that either the prophet Moses or St. Paul were deceivers, or be necessitated to consess that the Holy Ghost is a divine person in Jehovah; especially as you know that apostle has declared (when speaking, Heb. x. 10—14, of the persection of those who are fanctified by the offering of the body of Jesus Christ), that "the Holy Ghost is a witness "to us" of that glorious and invaluable oblation; and expressly afferts, ver. 15, 16, that the Holy Ghost was the divine person who spake those words (Jer. xxxi. 33), "This is the covenant that I will make with "them (the house of Israel); after those days, faith the "Lord (Heb. Jehovah), I will put my laws into their "hearts, and in their minds will I write them." And as the apostle, at the 17th verse, quotes the latter part of ver. 34 of Jer. xxxi. taking the substance and meaning of ver. 33, 34, he thereby shews that the Holy Ghost is Jehovah, Lord and God. For it is indisputably Jehovah that is the speaker, who says, ver. 33, "I will be their God."

The divinity of this glorious person in the Godhead may be proved also under the name of "the Spirit" of God." See Matt. iii. 16; xii. 28; Mark xii. 36; Rom. viii. 9, 14; xv. 19. But the 16th verse of this xvth chapter has something very remarkable to the purpose, "That the offering (or oblation) of the Gen-"tiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the "Holy Ghost." You know, Sir, that sanctification is the renovation of our nature. Now it is said, Lev. xxi. 15, 23; xxii. 9, 16, "I, Jehovah, do sanctify "them." Therefore the Holy Ghost is Jehovah.

Again, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9, "Jehovah searcheth all hearts." Psal. vii. 9, "The righteous God trieth the hearts and reins." Prov. xvii. 3, "Jehovah trieth the hearts." Jer. xvii. 10, "I, Jehovah, search the heart." But I find St. Paul says, 1 Cor. ii. 10, "The Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." Ver. 11, "The things of God knoweth no one (work);) but the Spirit of God." Chap.

xii. 3, "No man can fay that Jesus is the Lord, but "by the Holy Ghost." These texts prove that the Holy Spirit, or Holy Ghost, is Jehovah and Aleim, Lord and God.

Again, 2 Cor. iii. 18, "Are changed into the fame likeness, from glory to glory, even as of the Lord the Spirit." See margin of that verse. Ephes. iv.

30, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God."

Lastly, Phil. iii. 3, "For we are the circumcision," that worship God the Spirit; "Οι πυευματι Θεω λατρευοντες." The two nouns. πυευματι and Θεω, are both in the dative case; and when two genitives, or two datives, come together, one of them, you know, must be rendered as a nominative in our language, to make the sentence intelligible.—Montanus has that sentence, "Οι πυευματι Θεου λατρευοντες"—"Spritu Dei servientes," Worshipping the Spirit of God. The apostle Peter, Second Epistle, chap. i. 21, says, "Prophecy came not any time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

Lastly, in Ephes. ii. 8, "Faith is said to be "the gift of God." In 1 Cor. xii. 9, "Faith is said to be "the gift of the Spirit." And in Coloss. ii. 12, Faith is said to be "of the operation of God;" therefore the Holy Ghost is indubitably a divine person in the adorable Godhead.

Thus, Sir, I hope I have fully proved what my title-page proposes; and to those I recommend to your serious perusal the eighth chapter of that valuable book, entitled, "The Complete Duty of Man," written by the learned and Rev. Henry Venn, A. M. late Vicar of Huddersfield, Yorkshire; now Rector of Yilling, Huntingdonshire; Chaplain to the Right Hon. the Earl of Buchan; and late Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge;

bridge; printed for Newbury, &c. St. Paul's Church-Yard: where you may find fuch irrefutable proofs of the divinity and operation of the Holy Ghoft, and of his bleffed influence upon the fouls of the redeemed of Jesus Christ, as will confound all the sophistry that can be advanced to resute it.

CHAP. XV.

Proves that there are a Trinity of persons in the Unity of the Godhead who are co-equal and co-eternal, and that the glorious operations of santification, and of teaching divine wisdom, are ascribed equally to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Also that each of those divine persons is the object of prayer and advoration.—The principles skewn whereby a true believer is actuated.—A note on the liturgy and communion of the established church.—Anecdote of the first Lord Bolingbroke.—Instance of the blessed efficacy of preaching Christ Jesus as "the only wise God, our Saviour."—Anecdote of Lord Rochester.

As the holy Scriptures hold forth a Trinity of perfons in the Unity of the Godhead, it may not be improper to flate a few of those texts wherein that most important doctrine is exhibited.—First, Jesus Christ fays, John xvi. 13—15, "Howbeit when he, the "Spirit of Truth, is come, he will guide you into all "truth; for he will not speak of himself; but whatfo-"ever he shall hear, that will he speak, and he will "shew you things to come." Ver. 14, "He will glerify

" glorify me, for he shall receive of mine, and will shew " it unto you." Ver. 15, "All that the Father hath " are mine; therefore faid I, he will take of mine, and " will shew it unto you." Chap. xiv. 23, " Jesus said, " my Father will love him, and we will come unto " him, and make our abode with him."-St. John fays, I Epift. v. 7, "There are Three that bear record " in heaven, the Father, the Logos (or Word), and " the Holy Ghost; and these Three are One." I Pet. i. 2, " Elect according to the foreknowledge of God " the Father, through fanctification of the Spirit unto " obedience, and fprinkling of the blood of Jefus " Christ." Here all the divine names are particularly mentioned, and the office that each graciously condefcends to bear in the election of finners unto eternal life is manifested. Ephes. v. 20, "Giving thanks al-" ways for all things, unto God and the Father, in the " name of our Lord Jefus Chrift." Coloff. ii. 2, "To " the acknowledgment of the mystery of God and of " the Father, and of Christ." 1 Thess. iii. 11, "Now "God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus " Chrift, direct our way unto you."

In these last three Scriptures you may observe that the Holy Spirit is named first.—In the following Scriptures Jesus Christ is first named. 2 Cor. xiii. 14, "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen."—Also, Rom. xv. 30, "Now I beseech you, brethren, for the Lord Jesus Christ's fake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me in your prayers to God for me." Gal. i. 1, "Paul an apostle, not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father."

Why does the apostle say, " and God the Father," if Christ is not equal with the Father, respecting his Godhead?

There is an expression in the prophecy of Isaiah which has a beautiful allusion to this part of my subject. It is in chap. xii. 3, "With joy shall ye draw " water out of the wells of falvation." In Jer. ii. 13, and xvii. 13, Jehovah is called "the fountain of living " waters." St. John shews, chap. iv. 14, that the graces of the Holy Spirit are those "living waters;" and that the Lord Jesus Christ is the gracious donor of them; so that "the love, the everlasting love, of " the Father, the rich grace of the Son, and the fweet " communion of the Holy Ghost, are the blessed " fprings from whence these waters of falvation flow." "Yet it is but one fountain of grace flowing from " the divine effence, and is communicated to us from " the fulness of the God-man, Jesus. Hence we are " exhorted to draw freely with joy, and to drink abun-" dantly;" Cant. v. 1. For this fountain of divine bleffings is ever free, full and inexhauftible, and whofoever drinketh thereof shall experience it to be as the waters of falvation in him, fpringing up into everlasting life.

Sanctification is also equally ascribed to the three divine persons. Rom. xv. 16, "Being sanctified by "the Holy Ghost." Jude, ver. 1, "To them that "are fanctified by God the Father." 2 John, ver. 3, "Peace from God the Father and from the Lord Jesus "Christ." Why do the apostles John and Jude also accord with St. Paul, in saying, "God the Father?" Why that discrimination if there are not other persons in the Godhead? Heb. x. 9, "Then said he, lo, I come "to do thy will, O God." Ver. 10, "By the which "will we are fantified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ." Ver. 14, "For by that" one offering he hath perfected for ever those who are fantified."

Each divine person is the object of prayer. Ephes. iii. 14, "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Fa"ther of our Lord Jesus Christ." Luke xxiv. 57,
"They (the apostles) worshipped bim (Christ), and re"turned to Jerusalem with great joy." Phil. iii. 3,
"We are the circumcision" that worship God the Spirit. (See page 167.) The late Bishop Stillingfleet and the late Dr. Samuel Johnson (whom see in his English Dictionary, under "Latria") fay that the noun "Λατρεια" (from Λατρευω) signifies "the "highest kind of worship." Now "λατρευουτες" is a participle present. nom. plur. from that root. If therefore the Bishop and Dr. Johnson are not mistaken, the passage might be read, "For we are the circumcision" who pay the highest adoration to God the Spirit.

Also the gracious office of teaching divine wisdom is ascribed equally to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; so as to prove irrefutably that the holy adorable Trinity co-operate in carrying on the blessed work of grace in the hearts of true believers. Matt. x. 19, 20, "Take no thought what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that hour what ye shall speak; for it is not ye that speak but the Spirit of your Father that speaketh in you." Mark xiii. 11, "Take no thought what ye shall speak, neither premeditate, but whatsoever shall be given you, that speak ye; for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost." The same in Luke xii. 12.—And Christ says, Luke xxi. 14, 15, "Settle it therefore in your hearts not to meditate before what ye shall answer." Ver. 15, "For

" For I will give you a mouth and wisdom which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay, nor resist."

"Such is the economy of the covenant of grace." The glorious three perfons in the ever adorable Triinity concur in the falvation of finners.—The holy triune God having, in infinite wisdom, established an election according to grace *." "God, the Father, ordains good works, as the fruit of everlasting love, for all the heirs of salvation to walk in. Jesus, in whom they are chosen, atones for all the evil of their fins, and frees them from the condemnation of the law; but, though redeemed from wrath, yet fuch is our corrupt nature, that to do evil we are prone, but to do good," spiritual good, "we have neither will nor power" of ourselves; "but the divine Spirit exerts his agency upon all the members of Jesus; he operates upon them, and being his workmanship their souls are created in righteousness" and true holiness."

"Outward good works naturally fpring from inter"nal fpiritual life. As in nature the cause must pre"cede the effect, the tree must be made good before
"it brings forth good fruit; so in grace. Hence
"Christianity is rather a nature by Jesus Christ than
"a name from him; not a mere speculation of him,
"but a creation in him. Not a form in profession
"and letter, but a life in spirit and truth." Do you say, "How can these things be so?" How can One be Three, or Three One? I would reply, in the words of the Rev. Mr. Shepherd, Vicar of Tollar, Dorset,
"When we speak of the divine Trinity we never ^{*} See Ephes. i. 4; 2 Tim. i. 9; Titus i. 2; James i. 17, last clause; 1 Peter i. 2.

" affert that three are one, or one three; this would be felf-contradictory; but it is no contradiction to fay " that the Godhead is perfonally three, effentially one.

"In nature also there are mysteries which none can

" folve. For instance, fire, light, and air, are triune,

" they co-exist and are inseparable; each hath peculiar or properties, but the manner of their union remains a

" fecret to this prefent moment."

It now may be necessary to ask, what you propose to yourfelf from contradicting the holy Scriptures, and by endeavouring to degrade the Lord Jesus Christ, "the " Lord of glory," into a frail, "fallible, peccable, man, " like ourselves?" The design of every truly valuable minister in preaching and publishing is to promote the glory of God, and the good of mankind. Have your labours a tendency to these blessed ends? The whole aim and fcope of the Holy Bible is to lead men not to abstrule reasonings on its contents. On the contrary, their whole defign is to shew men that they are finners by nature and practice; and, feeing themselves in that awful state, they should flee to the atonement that Christ has made, lay down their arms of rebellion, and feek to find a reconciled God in Christ. (See 2 Cor. v. 18-21.) Who can be just, even while he justifies the sinner that believes in Jefus, Rom. iii. 26, and, refting upon his atonement for pardon, and upon his righteousness for acceptance, he may experience the power of divine grace turning him from his disobedience to the wisdom of the just; leading him to love God for the fake of his great love manifested to him in Christ, and from that principle of divine love, feeking to glorify God in all his thoughts, words, and works; loving all men (in fome degree), and according to his abilities feeking to do them good; but more especially to those who appear pear to him to fear God, and feek to promote his glory. And all that he does, which men call good, is from a principle of gratitude to God for the undeferved mercies bestowed upon himself in and through Christ Jesus; and all this is manifested to the believer himself by the internal bias of his own heart; and to others by the external deportment of his life and conversation. Therefore, however you may contemn the first eighteen articles of the religion of the Church of England, they will be found effentially true when "the earth " and all the works therein shall be burnt up;" because they are perfectly correspondent with the word of God; except, I humbly suppose, that "hell" in the third article should be Ados, Hades; and "Predestina-" tion" in the 17th article might better be read election *. But as you may ridicule this as Calvinism, and reject

* As far as I am capable of judging, I esteem the Liturgy of the Church of England as one of the best compositions that ever was penned to answer the purposes intended thereby;-from her doctrines, as laid down in her articles and homilies, as confonant to the revealed will of God in his holy word; and her communion I believe to be as pure as that of any church in the world; but it is greatly to be feared that multitudes esteem it sufficient to be professing members of her body, and are regardless of being partakers of the power of the benefit connected therewith. But fuch ought to be convinced that it is not enough to be churchmen in name only, we must be living members of Christ's true church, experimentally, in deed and in truth. That is, we must be partakers of the life of faith in Christ Jesus, as well as professors of it; for we must have an inward, secret assurance, that we are born again of God, John iii. 3, 7. By the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; Titus iii. 5. Being born again by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever; I Pet. i. 23 .-And that as we have borne the image of the earthy (Adam), we must also bear the image of the heavenly (Christ). " And put off, " as concerning the former conversation, the "old man, which is " corrupt, and be renewed in the spirit of our mind, and put on reject it, permit me to copy an anecdote of that L—d B——e, who, you know, made a pitiable fland against Christianity all his life; yet he sometimes had

"that new man which after God is created in righteousness and "true holiness;" otherwise "we deceive ourselves, and we are "far off from righteousness."—But while I advance so much in favour of our excellent establishment (and I humbly suppose that every well ordered state ought to have a regular established evangelical church), yet I do not mean to say that those among the Dissenters (who are truly evangelical in their principles and doctrines) are not pure churches. In essentials they agree with the established church; and, as the peu of the late elegant Rev. Mr. Hervey expresses it, "They are like slowers which bloom from the same "root, that are somewhat diversished in the mixture of their co-"lours." While Arianism and Socinianism are like noxious weeds, whose juices too frequently insect or posson many a seeming wholesome plant around them.

But, as I have a due veneration for the established church, and most earnestly wish to see it so perfect as that none of her enemies should have any just cause for censure, I would humbly submit to the most Reverend Bishops, &c. whether the reading of the third or last paragraph in the doxology or hymn of the communion service, beginning, "Glory be to God on high," &c. be perfectly confiftent with fo folemn a part of the public worship; as it ascribes boliness to Christ alone, and calls him the only Lord; which I suppose is from 1 Cor. viii. 6. But it should be observed that the first paragraph addresses the Father as Lord and God; therefore, to say afterward, that Christ only is "holy," and that he only is the "Lerd," implies, if not expresses, a contradiction. And I cannot help confidering the whole of that third paragraph as too incautiously expressed, if not a jumble of words, that greatly need amendment in fo ferious an address to the Majesty of heaven on fo very folemn an occasion; therefore, with the utmost deference and respect, I would humbly recommend the following alteration, as far more confonant with (I humbly suppose), and suitable to, the folemnity of that important fervice - For thou art the holy one; Luke i. 35; Rev. iii. 7. Thou art the Lord; 1 Cor. viii 6; xii. 3; Philip. ii. 11. Thou, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art glorious in holiness; Titus ii. 13; Rom. i. 4; John i. 14; and worthy of our highest adoration, Pfal. xlv. 6, 7; Heb. i. 6-8, with God the Father.

fudden qualms of confcience which staggered him, infomuch that he would occasionally read good books; " confessed, and observed, that Calvin's principal ob-" ject was to establish the doctrine of special grace. "What is your opinion, my Lord, faid B——e? "Why (replied the bishop) we have unanimously agreed to let those abstruct points alone, and preach morality and practical godliness. To which L—d "B——e replied, This is the strongest evidence " of the Christian religion I have ever met with; for " none but the power of God can support that which " you gentlemen are unanimously endeavouring to "fuppress." But his lordship had so long trifled with the divine patience and goodness towards him, that he was at last cut off, and died (it may be justly feared) without repentance; for "his lordship was deprived " of his fenfes at the very time he was about writing a most pernicious book"—" The design of which " was to burlefque things facred, and to fet in a very " ridiculous light fome of the most exemplary Chris-" tians under the notion of faint errantry." And while you confider the holy Scriptures only as a history, and reprefent "Jesus Christ only as a mere man, frail, and " peccable, like ourselves," you can never hope to see any man "turned from darkness to light, or from the " power of Satan to ferve the living and true God," in holy obedience.

Allow me, Sir, to ask, Did you ever see, by any of your writings or preaching, any soul truly converted to God; that is, turned from natural darkness to spiritual light, and from the power and works of Satan to serve the living and true God in purity, in holiness, and newness of life? Or have you known any, on their death-beds, bleffing and praising God for your doctrines and ministry, triumphing over death, the grave, and hell, faying, with holy raptures, something like this, "Lord, now lettest thou thy fer-" vant depart in peace," through faith in thy most holy and comfortable word, whereby mine eyes have been given to see "thy precious, precious falvation?" I will answer for you that you never experienced this honour, nor ever will, except the eyes of your understanding should be enlightened to renounce all dependence on yourself, and to lay hold on and preach Christ Jesus as your Lord and your God.

I have heard of a Mr. Elliot, a minister of the gospel in New England, who, upon visiting the Indian nations, learnt that their powahs (priests) taught their countrymen to worship the devil. Mr. Elliot, having learnt their language, endeavoured to shew the Indians the danger of fuch worship; upon which the powahs incenfed their people fo much against him that they threatened to murder him (Elliot) if he ever came among them again. But he, being a faithful fervant of his divine Mafter, zealous for his glory, and defirous of fnatching precious and immortal fouls from their cruel enemy, caused it to be published that he would preach at one of their chief towns the week following, naming the day; despising their threats, and challenging their powahs to refute his doctrine. A vast multitude assembled, and Mr. Elliot preached from the Epistle of Jude, ver. 25, "The only wise "God our Saviour." When he exalted the Redeemer, and abased the sinner, and charged the powahs with misleading the people; declaring also, I am a fervant of the only living and true God, I defy you all;

if you have any infernal power use it.-They hung down their heads in filence, while their poor deluded votaries cried out, "Elliot's God! Elliot's God!" This is fomething like the controverfy between Elijah and the prophets of Baal; 2 Kin. chap. xviii. Had you been in Mr. Elliot's place, and had preached " Jesus Christ as a mere man, and as one that came " only to fet us an example," and fuch heretical ftuff, I have not the least doubt but that the infernal spirits whom they worshipped would have fully proved your herefy, and would have had the fame power over you as they had over the Jews, exorcifts, mentioned in the xixth chap. of Acts, verse 13-17, infomuch that you would not have escaped "naked," and only "wounded," but I fincerely believe that you would have been deprived of life, and fummoned to appear at his awful tribunal, who would have confidered himfelf as unutterably degraded by fuch preachments; because, as I have clearly shown, " he is Jehovah;" therefore he will not abate a fingle iota of the glory and dignity most justly due to his divine Majesty *.

^{*} The following may ferve to illustrate what I have said respecting the necessity of ministers (who wish to be successful in their ministerial labours) "preaching Christ Jesus, and him crucified," as the grand basis of a sinner's salvation.—" One of the Bishops of Oxford (in the reign of King Charles II.) hearing that Mr. Baxter preached in the neighbourhood of that city, and was attended by a very numerous congregation; his lordship went to preach bimself at Oxford, by way of drawing the public attention from Mr. Baxter that but not being successful, he cited that pious minister before the House of Lords, where complaining that though Baxter (whom his lordship called a demi-god) had ten thousand to hear him, he (the bishop) had not one hundred. Upon which Lord Rochester (who was a school-sellow with Baxter) replied, Your Lordship has accounted for it; Mr. Baxter preached Jesus Christ, but your Lordship preached yourself."

CHAP. XVI.

A friendly exhortation to Dr. Priestley, with a serious short meditation (from the late learned and pious Rev. Dr. Doddridge) of the unutterable value of one immortal soul.

Now, Sir, permit me to wish you feriously to confider, that every obstinate unbeliever (fee Mark xvi. 16, Heb. x. 29) in Christ (as God-man) does despite to the righteous mercy of the Aleim; and, as it were, challenges his justice to exert itself. For Christ fays, John viii. 24, "If ye believe not (στι εγω ειμι) that " I am, ye shall die in your fins." Because such perfons make no acknowledgment of their crimes, offer no fatisfaction to the infulted Majesty of heaven; on the contrary, they reject the fatisfaction that has been made to divine justice, and refuse the only means of pardon when freely offered to them, 'without money and without price.' Is not therefore the condemnation of fuch unavoidable, because just? " It is faith " alone in the holy Jehovah Aleim (as revealed in " the Scriptures of divine truth) which must place us " in a ftate of falvation; and the obedience which, " by the Holy Spirit's grace, is a confequence of that " faith will evidence that we are made meet to be par-" takers of the inheritance of the faints in light and " glory." (See the Rev. Mr. Alexander Catcott's Sermons, A. M. late Vicar of St. Stephen's, Briftol.)

And it is a most awful consideration that truth will support us in afferting that the evil spirits dishonour Christ Jesus less than unbelieving men; for when they selt

his power (though clothed in human flesh) they knew who he was, and were desirous to proclaim him to the world, but he would not suffer them. On the contrary, as the sceptics and insidels of this generation make a scoff at the mentioning the divinity of the glorious Redeemer, do they not thereby seal their own condemnation and make it sure?

Finally, If any man robs me of my purfe, or even fullies my character, those may produce only a temporary inconvenience; but if he endeavours to rob me, my children, and the Christian church, of the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and attempts to degrade his divine Majesty to a level with frail, mutable, impotent, finful, perifhing man; he strives to rob me, my children, and the church, of the living God, of our most stable foundation, our most important, precious hope, and our highest consolation.—It is on this account chiefly that I have used many expressions which may appear to you rather harsh; but permit me to affure you, Sir, that I am very far from meaning the least incivility, or from having even the least degree of illwill towards you. On the contrary, I have a proper respect for, and goodwill to, your person; though I am convinced that there is the utmost necesfity (as I flatter myfelf I have clearly demonstrated in the preceding pages) to detest and reject your avowed religious principles, and to represent them in the odious light that I have done; because they are proved to be unutterably dishonourable to God, and inconceivably dangerous to the best interests of mankind; as is manifested by your opinions being in the strongest oppofition, not only to the word of God, but also to the established national religion, and likewise to those of all the established reformed churches abroad; so that, suppoling posing the Church of England to be wrong, which I by no means admit, yet it is far more reasonable to suppose that you should be in an error, than that all those should be so.

Perhaps you may fay that it is not my particular province to attempt the teaching of religion, I confess it, yet I have a right to point out dangerous errors that they may be shunned *; and I esteem it an obligation upon me, in some measure, to represent your published heterodox opinions in the light I have done; because that the various answers of several reverend gentlemen (which I have read) do not so clearly exhibit your errors, nor so fully prove them to the contumacious, or scrupulous readers as I humbly hope may be found in the preceding pages †.

That

^{*} The late pious and learned Dr. Doddridge fays, that "The evernal trivation of one foul is of greater importance, and big with greater events, than the temporal falvation of a whole kingdom, though it were for the space of ten thousand ages; because there will come up a point, an instant in eternity, when that one foul shall have existed as many ages as all the individuals of a whole empire (ranged in close succession) will, in the whole, have existed in the space of ten thousand ages. Therefore one soul is capable of a larger share of happiness or misery throughout an endless eternity (for that will ever be before it), more than a whole kingdom is capable of in ten thousand ages."

⁺ Probably it may be faid there are a great number of very refpectable persons whose moral conduct honours their profession, and whose opinions persectly coincide with Dr. Priestly's in matters of religion, and therefore you should have shown more respect to them (as well as to the doctor) than you have done by so open a condemnation of their principles. I would reply to this, I have a due respect for the persons of several gentlemen of that persuasion;
but, as I humbly hope that I have fully proved the points I set out upon, I will not give up "the truth as it is in Jesus" to any man,

That you may fee, ere it be too late*, the indispensable hecessity of slying to the invaluable atonement of Christ Jesus, and of laying hold of his persect righteousness by faith, is the servent wish of him who prays for all men, and who earnestly desires to "commend you to" God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to "build you up, and to give you an inheritance among "all those who are sanctified by faith that is in Christ "Jesus;" Acts xx. 32; xxvi. 18.

A Grey-beaded SEAMAN.

or fet of men. And I would ask, Is it not a matter of the highest import for these gentlemen to examine these sheets with candour, and the utmost attention? At the same time giving strick heed to the apostle's exhortation, 2 Cor xiii. 5. For the holy Scriptures fully manifest, that whosoever buildeth on any other foundation than Christ Jesus as their "wisdom, righteousness, fanctification, " and redemption," they build upon a fandy one; fo that when the floods of righteous indignation, and the tempest of divine justice, shall come upon those who have not fled for refuge to lay hold of that "hope fet before them in the gospel," they must be fwept into irretrievable and endless misery. But whoso buildeth upon that rock of eternal ages will " have an anchor for the foul, both " fure and stedfast, and which entereth into that within the vail;" Heb. vi. 18, 19. And those who attain the highest degrees of morality, having built upon that foundation, they will be the topstones of the glorious edifice; and, in the highest strains of grateful adoration and praise, they will shout, "Grace, grace, unto " him, and to him only, who is the merciful giver of all grace."

POSTSCRIPT.

A hint to persons who may blame a Seaman for writing on this subject. A significant apology for so doing on Scripture authority; with a comment on ανανήψωσιν, 2 Tims ii. 26, and the true meaning of the root ανανήψω.

Should any of Dr. Priestley's friends say, The contempt that you have shown for, and the censure that you have passed upon, his theological writings belongs not to you; it might have been supportable from a bishop, or a dignified clergyman; but a seaman has not any concern therewith; it is entirely out of your province; therefore the heaviest anathema that ever was fent from the Roman pontiff is too favourable for you, -Stop a moment, Sir, and let fanctified reason (if you are a possessor in any degree of that bleffing) take the place of paffion and prejudice, while I inform you that it is as much the duty of a private fearman, upon the forecaftle, when he descrys an unexpected rock or fhoal, whereon the ship is in danger of being precipitated and wrecked, not only to proclaim the jeopardy, but it is also his duty to affift in tacking or wearing * the ship to get clear of that danger. I fay it is as incumbent upon that private feaman fo to do as it is the duty of the officer, who may be commanding on the quarter deck, to use his utmost abilities to preferve the ship from the threatening deitruction.

Also, if a vigilant seaman perceives any of his shipmates upon a topsail-yard, when the ship is so violently

agitated by the fea, as to cause that yard to swing, or vibrate with such sorce, as to endanger their being thrown from it, he would instantly discover the peril; and, though none of his officers should order him to haul tort the braces, &c. to steady that yard, he would hasten to do it; because he knows well that if this should be neglected, his shipmates would be in the most imminent danger of being thrown down, and either dashed to pieces upon the deck, or jerked into the sea without any reasonable hope of saving them from destruction.

Or perhaps the following may be more intelligible to you, and to many others. It is as much the duty of a private foldier to prevent (if in his power) the fpringing of a mine, which would destroy the whole advanced guard, as it is that of any of the officers belonging thereto. And though I am only a private in the camp of Christ, I esteem it my privilege as well as my duty, to found this alarm in the humble hope that fome of my comrades (fellow-citizens) may be preferved from the destruction that threatens on the right hand by subtilty, on the lest by the open attacks of our daring adversaries. And I am encouraged to this by our high Admiral, who says, by the prophet Daniel, chap. xi. 32, "Such as do wickedly against the cove-" nant shall be corrupted by flatteries;" Ver. 33, "But they that understand among the people shall in"fruct many."—Also "instruct those that oppose
"themselves; if God, peradventure, will give them
"repentance to the acknowledging of the truth,
"and that they may recover themselves;" or rather that they may be awaked (ἀνανήψωσιν. 3d perf. plur. aorist. 1st. subjunct. from ἀνανήφω, which signifies " to " awake out of a drunken fleep, and become fober")

" out of the fnare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will;" 2 Tim. ii. 25, 26.—" That word" (ἀνανήφω), fays the late learned Dr. Doddridge, " refers to an artifice of fowlers to featter feeds, " impregnated with fome drugs, intended to lay birds " afleep, that they might draw the net over them with " the greater fecurity." In like manner do not fome perfons, among the Socinians, endeavour to intoxicate the ignorant and unwary with an oftentatious show " of philosophy," which the apostle calls "vain de-" ceit," Colof. ii. 8, when it is only "after the tradiss tion of men, after the rudiments of the world, and " not" (2272) according to the doctrines " of Christ?" But by that specious appearance they, with greater facility, draw men into that dreadful fnare wherein they themselves are so awfully and miserably entangled: ls not therefore the prophecy of Jeremiah, chap. v. 26, literally fulfilled in them? "Among my people " are found wicked men; they lay wait as he that fetteth fnares, they fet a trap, they catch men;" therefore fuch as have hitherto escaped their gin may fay, with the royal pfalmift, Pfal. exxiv. 6, "Bleffed be "the Lord, who hath not given us over for a prey unto their teeth." Ver. 7, "Our fouls are escaped " out of the fnare of the fowler, the fnare is broken, " and we are delivered." How? Because " our " help is in the name of Jehovah, who made heaven " and earth;" that is Christ, as I have clearly and fully demonstrated in the preceding pages, "whose eternal power and Godhead angels adore, devils " tremble at, faints rejoice in, and only poor, blinded, " proud, finners, dare cavil against and deny." But " he is the brightness of the glory of God, the express " image of his person, who upholdeth all things; for

"by him are all things; who is gone into hea"ven, and is on the right hand of God, angels, &c.
"&c. being subjected to him." Reader, if thou hast that blessed faith, "which is of the operation of God," Colos. ii. 12, here is a promise that can never fail thee. "He will" affuredly "deliver thee from the "snare of the sowler; he shall cover thee with his "feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust; his
"truth shall be thy shield and buckler." Ps. xci. 3,4.

The facred Scriptures of divine truth declare, that "if ye believe not that I am, ye shall die in your sins," John viii. 24. (See also John iii. 36; I John v. 10, 12.) Compassion therefore leads me servently to wish that such persons as deny the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ would take King Solomon's advice, who was at least as wise as the most sapient; as deeply versed in science and literature as the most learned; as intelligent as the most skissul, as the most experienced Socinian, that the world was ever doomed to bear; where the royal prophet says, "Give not sleep "to thine eyes, nor slumber to thine eye-lids," (until) he causes deliverance "as a roe" from the possession "(of the hunter), and as a bird from the" custody "of the sowler*;" Prov. vi. 5.

Should any of those gentlemen, whose tenets I have attempted to refute, suppose that they can disprove the principles I have laid down, and subvert my argu-

It may be here necessary to observe that been is not in hithpael, but in hiphil. Neither is it in the second person sing, but in the third; therefore instead of reading it, "deliver thyself," I have rendered it, he caused deliverance. And I have also translated the nonn re, possession and custody, for reasons which every Hebraist will perceive, and as every one that dislikes tautology will excuse; for although that nonn is frequently read "hand" very properly, yet it also signifies possession, custody, &c. ments, let them try; the way is as open (in this country) to them as to me. I am perfuaded that the defire will not be wanting, but the ability. Why? Not because it is my production; that would be insupportable arrogance, unpardonable presumption, indeed: but because the foundation whereupon I have built "standeth fast;" yea, "it abideth for ever;" for it is the truth as laid down in the facred word of the living and only true God; therefore cannot be resuted.

Speedily will be published,

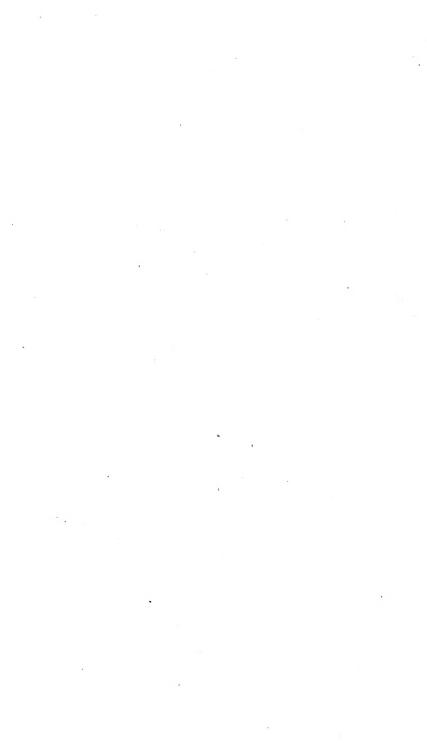

A GENERAL SELECTION of the obscure and disputable passages found in the Sacrèd Scriptures, with the various readings they are capable of, in their original languages; by which means it is hoped many obstacles will be removed from, and much establishment afforded to, the minds of the godly reader: the craft and wickedness of Arian, Socinian, and Sabellian Deists, exposed; as well as the Arminian and Catholic Cabalists, who, in the present day, shelter themselves under the notion of a false translation of the Scriptures.

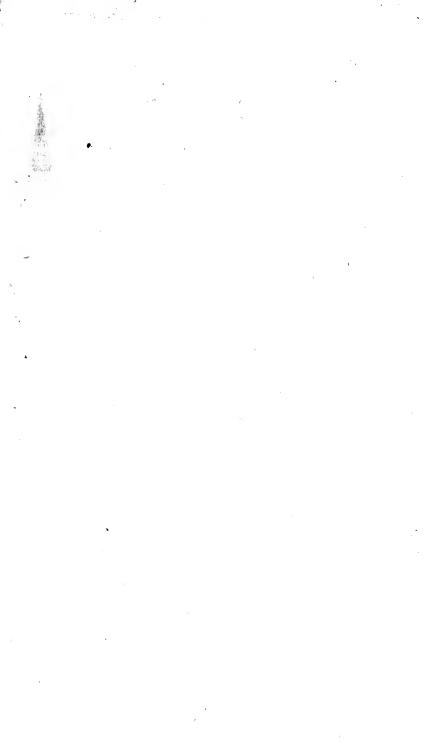

As there may be many obscure passages of Scripture yet unnoticed by the author of this work, he solicits such of the godly as have had any difficulties of the kind occur in their reading of the Scriptures, to sorward them to him, directed for O. S. to be left at either of the Publishers of this work (post paid), and they shall be duly attended to.

Also in the Press, and speedily will be published, in 8vo.

A MOST APPROVED AND CONCISE HEBREW GRAMMAR, WITH THE POINTS;

Accompanied with a very valuable paradigm of the Verbs in the Hebrew Language, by which their conjugations may be seen at one view.
